From the thick shade, and Adam to his bow'r.

Embrace'd me, parting for the Etrurian land.

6. To PART with. To quit; to resign; to lose; to be separated from.

For her sake, I do rear up her boy;
And for her sake, I will not part with him.

An affectionate wife, when in fear of parting with her beloved husband, heartily desired of God his life or society, upon any conditions that were not sinful.

Celia, for thy sake, I part
With all that grew so near my heart;
And that I may successful prove,
Transform myself to what you love.

Thou marble hew'd, ere long to part with breath,
And houses rear'd, unmindful of thy death.

Lixivate salts, though, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, they dispose them to part readily with their tincture; yet some tinctures they do not only draw out, but likewise alter.

The ideas of hunger and warmth are some of the first that children have, and which they scarce ever part with.

What a despicable figure must mock-patriots make, who venture to be hang'd for the ruin of those civil rights, which their ancestors, rather than part with, chose to be cut to pieces in the field of battle?

The good things of this world so delight in, as remember, that we are to part with them, to exchange them for more durable enjoyments.

As for riches and power, our Saviour plainly determines, that the best way to make them blessings, is to part with them.

PARTABLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; such as may be parted.

His hot love was partable among three other of his mistresses.

PARTAGE. n. f. [partage, Fr.] Division; act of sharing or parting. A word merely French.

Men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth, having found out a way, how a man may fairly possess more land, than he himself can use the product of, by receiving, in exchange, for the overplus, gold and silver: this partage of things, in an equality of private possessions, men have made practicable out of the bounds of society, without compact, only by putting a value on gold and silver, and tacitly agreeing in the use of money.

TO PARTAKE. v. n. Preterite, I partook: participle passive, partaken. [part and take.]

side of the question more than the other.
Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law. Mal. ii. 9.
2. Inclined to favour without reason.
Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends, and ill nature, passion, and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence, God hath appointed governments to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.
Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not crickers to their judgment too. Pope.
In these, one may be sincerer to a reasonable friend, than to a fond and partial parent. Pope.
3. Affecting only one part; subsisting only in a part; not general; not universal; not total.
If we compare these partial dissolutions of the earth with an universal dissolution, we may as easily conceive an universal deluge from an universal dissolution, as a partial deluge from a partial. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
That which weakens religion, will at length destroy it; for the weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of
it. South's Sermons.
All discord, harmony, not underfoot;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.
PARTIALITY. n. f. [partialité, Fr. from partial.] Unequal state of the judgment and favour of one above the other, without just reason.
Then would the Irish party cry out partiality, and complain he is not used as a subject, he is not suffered to have the free benefit of the law. Spenser on Ireland.
Partiality is properly the understanding's judging according to the inclination of the will and affections, and not according to the exact truth of things, or the merits of the cause. South.
As there is a partiality to opinions, which is apt to mislead the understanding; so there is also a partiality to studies, which is prejudicial to knowledge. Locke.
TO PARTIALIZE. v. a. [partialiser, Fr. from partial.] To make partial. A word, perhaps, peculiar to Shakespeare, and not unworthy of general use.

embraced, and partly shall hereafter embrace the christian religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which I take to arise out of the wonderful plenty of their country, that does not make labour so necessary to them, and partly out of the temper of their climate, that relaxes the fibres of their bodies, and disposes the people to such an idle indolent humour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- PARTNER*. n. f. [from part.]
1. PARTNER, sharer; one who has part in any thing; associate.
My noble partner,

Many in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses Than mortal creatures. Milton's Paradise Lost.
She was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonaire. Dryden.
While thus we stood as in a froud,
Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.
PASSINGBELL. n. f. [passing and bell.] The bell which rings at the hour of departure, to obtain prayers for the passing soul:
it is often used for the bell, which rings immediately after death.
Those loving papers,
Thicken on you now, as pray'rs ascend
To heaven in troops at a good man's passingbell. Donne.
A talk of tumult, and a breath
Would serve him as his passingbell to death. Daniel.
Before the passingbell begun,
The news through half the town has run. Swift.
PASSION. n. f. [passion, French; passio, Latin.]
1. Any effect caused by external agency.
The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter are plebeian notions, applied to the instruments men ordinarily practise. Bacon.
A body at rest affords us no idea of any active power to move, and when, set in motion, it is rather a passion than an action in it. Locke.
2. Violent commotion of the mind.
All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts and rash embrac'd despair. Shakefp.
Thence every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep: whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admired. Shakespeare.
Vex'd I am
Of late, with passions of some difference. Shakespeare.
I am doubtful, left
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him:
If you should smile, he grows impatient.
In loving thou do'st well, in passion not;
Wherein true love consists not. Milton's Par. Lost.
Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime condemn'd
For ever now to have their lot in pain. Milton's Par. Lost.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
All the art of rhetoric, besides order and perspicuity, only moves the passions, and thereby misleads the judgment. Locke.
3. Anger.
The word passion signifies the receiving any action in a large philosophical sense; in a more limited philosophical sense, it signifies any of the affections of human nature; as love, fear, joy, sorrow: but the common people confine it only to anger. Watts.
4. Zeal; ardour.
Where statemen are ruled by faction and interest, they can have no passion for the glory of their country, nor any concern for the figure it will make. Addison on Medals.
5. Love.
For your love,
You kill'd her father: you confest'd you drew
A mighty argument to prove your passion for the daughter.
He, to grate me more,
Publickly own'd his passion for Amestris. Rowe.
Survey yourself, and then forgive your slave,
Think what a passion such a form must have. Cranevil.
6. Eagerness.
Abate a little of that violent passion for fine cloaths, so predominant in your sex. Swift.
7. Emphatically. The last suffering of the redeemer of the world.
He shew'd himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs. Acts i. 3.

PASSION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceding Easter, named in commemoration of our Saviour's crucifixion.
PASSIONATE. adj. [passionné, French.]
1. Moved by passion; causing or expressing great commotion of mind.
My whole endeavour is to resolve the conscience, and to shew what, in this controversy, the heart is to think, if it will follow the light of sound and sincere judgment, without either cloud of prejudice or mist of passionate affection. Hosker.
Thucydides observes, that men are much more passionate for injustice than for violence; because the one coming as from an equal seems rapine; when the other proceeding from one stronger is but the effect of necessity. Clarendon.
Good angels looked upon this ship of Noah's with a passionate concern for its safety. Burnet.
Men, upon the near approach of death, have been roused up into such a lively sense of their guilt, such a passionate degree of concern and remorse, that, if ten thousand ghosts had appeared to them, they scarce could have had a fuller conviction of their danger. Atterbury's Sermon.
2. Easily moved to anger.
Homer's Achilles is haughty and passionate, impatient of any restraint by laws, and arrogant in arms. Prior.
To PASSIONATE. v. a. [from passion.] An old word. Obsolete.
1. To affect with passion.
Great pleasure mix'd with piteous regard,
Thar godly king and queen did passionate,
Whilist they his piteous adventures heard. Fairy Queen.
2. To express passionately.
Thy niece and I want hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.
PASSIONATELY. adv. [from passionate.]
1. With passion; with desire, love or hatred; with great commotion of mind.
Whoever passionately covets any thing he has not, has lost his hold. L'Estrange.
If sorrow expresses itself never so loudly and passionately, and discharge itself in never so many tears, yet it will no more purge a man's heart, than the washing of his hands can cleanse the rottenness of his bones. South's Sermon.
I made Melchinda, in opposition to Nourmahal, a woman passionately loving of her husband, patient of injuries and contempt, and constant in her kindness. Dryden.
2. Angerily.
They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.
PASSIONATENESS. n. f. [from passionate.]
1. State of being subject to passion.
2. Vehemence of mind.
To love with some passionateness the person you would marry, is not only allowable but expedient. Boyle.
PASSIVE. adj. [passif, French; passivus, Latin.]
1. Receiving impression from some external agent.
High above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.
As the mind is wholly passive in the reception of all its simple ideas, so it exerts several acts of its own, whereby, out of its simple ideas, the other is formed. Locke.
The vis inertiae is a passive principle by which bodies persist in their motion or rest, receive motion in proportion to the force impressing it, and resist as much as they are resisted:
by this principle alone, there never could have been any motion in the world. Newton's Opticks.
2. Unresisting; not opposing.
Not those alone, who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause. Dunciad.
3. Suffering; not acting.
[In grammar.]
A verb passive is that which signifies passion or the effect of action: as, discor, I am taught. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
PASSIVELY. adv. [from passive.] With a passive nature.
Though some are passively inclin'd,
The greater part degenerate from their kind. Dryden.
PASSIVENESS. n. f. [from passive.]
1. Quality of receiving impression from external agents.
2. Passibility; power of suffering.
We shall lose our passiveness with our being, and be as incapable of suffering as heaven can make us. Decay of Piety.
PASSIVITY. n. f. [from passive.] Passiveness. An innovated word.
There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, between passivity and activity, these being contrary and opposite, the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convey put into his purse. Shakespeare.
Having used extreme caution in granting passports to Ireland, he conceived that paper not to have been delivered. Clar.
The gospel has then only a free admission into the assent of the understanding, when it brings a passport from a rightly disposed will, as being the faculty of dominion, that commands all, that shuts out, and lets in, what objects it pleases. South's Sermons.
Admitted in the shining throng,
He shows the passport which he brought along;
His passport is his innocence and grace,
Well known to all the natives of the place. Dryden.
At our meeting in another world;

PAT

5. Not hasty; not viciously eager or impetuous.
Too indolent to be great,
Nor patient to expect the turns of fate,
They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.
- PATIENT. n. f. [patient, Fr.]
1. That which receives impressions from external agents.
Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Gov. of the Tongue.
To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disagreeing things. Creecb.
Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts's Logick.
2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.
You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.
Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonable-ness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.
A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.
3. It is sometimes, but rarely used absolutely for a sick person.
Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found On the hard matrels or the mother ground. Dryden.
TO PATIENT. v. a. [patient, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.
Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shakesp.
PATIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]
1. Without rage under pain or affliction.
Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without,
How patiently you hear him groan!
How glad the case is not your own. Swift.
2. Without vicious impetuosity.
That which they grant, we gladly accept at their hands, and with that patiently they would examine how little cause they have to deny that which as yet they grant not. Hooker.
Could men but once be persuaded patiently to attend to the dictates of their own minds, religion would gain more pro-felytes. Calamy's Sermons.
PATINE. n. f. [patina, Lat.] The cover of a chalice. Ainsf.
PATLY. adv. [from pat.] Commodiously; fitly.
PATRIARCH. n. f. [patriarcha, Fr. patriarcha, Latin.]
1. One who governs by paternal right; the father and ruler of a family.
So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve Perfited, yet submiss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he flays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.
2. A bishop superior to archbishops.
The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Raleigh.
Where secular primates were heretofore given, the eccle-siastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PATRIARCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, Fr. from patriarch.]
1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.
Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clays,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.
Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.
2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.
Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHATE. n. f. [patriarchat, Fr. from patriarch.] A patriarchship; bishoprick superior to archbishopricks.
Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship and archbishoprick. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHY. n. f. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate.
Calabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brerewood.
PATRICIAN. adj. [patrician, Fr. patricius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

PAT

A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.
Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.
PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimony.] Possessed by inheritance.
The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patri-monial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.
Their patrimonial sloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.
PATRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Latin; patrimoine, Fr.] An estate possessed by inheritance.
Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.
So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one great a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.
In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton's Par. Lost.
For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton's Agonista.
Their ships like wasted patrimonies flew;
Where the thin scattering trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.
The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.
PATRIOT. n. f. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.
Patriots who for sacred freedom stood.
The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison's Cato.
Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.
PATRIOTISM. n. f. [from patriot.] Love of one's country; zeal for one's country.
TO PATROCINATE. v. a. [patrocinar, Latin; patrociner, old French.] To patronize; to protect; to defend. Dist.
PATROL. n. f. [patrouille, patrouille, old French.]
1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.
O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson's Summer.
TO PATROUILLER. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.
These out guards of the mind are sent abroad
And fill patrolling beat the neighb'ring road,
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackmore.
PATRON. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Latin.]
1. One who countenances, supports or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.
I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakesp.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.
2. A guardian saint.
Thou amongst those saints, whom thou dost see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Fairy Queen, b. i.
St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.
3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.
We ate no patrons of those things; the best defence where-of is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.
Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.
4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.
PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]
1. Support; protection.
Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious handmaid against virtue.
Here's patronage, and here our art decuries,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the cloister ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain, Creecb.
And how too often we may court in vain. 2. Guardianship

PAT

2. Guardianship of saints.
From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman Catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.
3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.
TO PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To patronize; to protect. A bad word.
Dar'lt thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?
Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your faucy tongue. Shakesp.
An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakesp.
PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.] Protecting; support-ing; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.
The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PATRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Lat.]
1. A female that defends, countenances or supports.
Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,
When with two trusty maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairfax.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the fove-reign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.
Beside me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.
It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.
2. A female guardian saint.
TO PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to sup-port; to defend; to countenance.
Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Bac.
All tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South's Sermons.
I have been effeminated and patronised by the grandfather, the father and the son. Dryden.
PATRONYMICK. n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydidēs, the son of Tydeus.

PATTEEN OF A PILLAR. n. f. Its base. Ainsworth.
PATTEENMAKER. n. f. [patte and maker.] He that makes pattens.
PATTEN. n. f. [patin, Fr.] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women to keep them from the dirt.
Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call crackowes, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Camden's Remains.
Good housewives
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.
TO PATTER. v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.
Patter'ing hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.
PATTEEN. n. f. [patron, Fr. patroon, Dutch.]
1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.
As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.
I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakesp. King Lear.
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Claren.
Lose not the honour you have early won,
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power.
This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury's Sermons.
Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern, than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.
Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our fight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

PAU

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.
A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.
3. An instance; an example.
What God did command touching Canaan, the same com-merneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.
4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.
TO PATTERN. v. a. [patroner, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.
Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, Shakesp.
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes.
2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.
When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakesp.
PA'VAN. n. f. A kind of light tripping dance. Ainsf.

1. Fewness; smallness of number.
The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.
In such slender corpuscles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpuscles. Boyle.
Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.
2. Smallness of quantity.
This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals: as, lizards, frogs and other fishes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]
1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.
Should she kneel down,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror. Shakesp.
Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.
From this chymic flame
I see a city of more precious mold,
With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryden.
The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.
2. To make a passage easy.
It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bac.
PAVEMENT. n. f. [pavimentum, Lat.] Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor.
The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd Into his radiant roof. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.
The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.
The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequali-ties of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pav-ment, but a double one. Arbutnot on Coins.
PAVER. n. f. [from pave.] One who lays with stones.
PAVIER. n. f. [from pave.] One who lays with stones.
For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
Whilst ev'ry stroke his lab'ring lungs rebound. Gay.
PAVILION. n. f. [pavillon, French.] A tent; a temporary or moveable house.
Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavillion, and the flowers to the trees a mosaical floor. Sidney.
She did lie
In her pavillion, cloth of gold, of tiffue. Shakesp.
He, only he, heaven's blew pavillion spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandy.
It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand by a trumpet in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavillion. Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.
The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds
Its bright pavillions in a veil of clouds. Pope.
TO PAVILION. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with tents.
Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavillion'd with his guardians bright. Milton.
2. To be sheltered by a tent.
With his batt'ning flocks the careful swain
Abides pavillion'd on the grassy plain.
PAUNCH. n. f. [panse, French; pança, Spanish; panex, Latin.] The belly; the region of the guts.
Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard; Antipater would say of him, that he was like a sacrifice, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.

PAW

Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.
To PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to exenterate; to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.
With a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake. Shakefp.

One pafs had paunch'd the huge hydropick knight. Garth.
PAUPER. n. f. [Latin.] A poor person; one who receives alms.
PAUSE. n. f. [pause, Fr. pause, low Latin; παυση.]
1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.
Neither could we ever come to any pause, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and intreats his pause. Shakefp.
Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.
The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.
Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little pause of joys
In those great moments, when their god employs Their ministry. Prior.
What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort bring
The names of wife or great. Prior.
Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addison's Spectator, N^o 133.

If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Esrange.
Each claims possession,
Both their paws are fastened on the prey. Dryden.
2. Hand. In contempt.
Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.
To PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.
The fiery courser, when he hears from far,
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight. Dryden.
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain,
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.
Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his hoofs, struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

PAY

8. Silence; suppression of the thoughts.
'Twill out;—I peace!
No, I will speak as liberal as the air. Shakefp. Peace.
In an examination, a freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very fauily had almost all the words; and amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the examiners, who was a freed servant of Scribonianus; I pray, Sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? he answered, I would have stood behind his chair and held my peace. Bacon.
She said; and held her peace: Æneas went Sad from the cave. Dryden.
PEACE. interjection. A word commanding silence.
Peace! fear, thou comest too late, when already the arm is taken. Stidley, b. ii.
Hark! peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern't good night. Shakefp.
Peace, good reader do not weep;
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
They, sweet turtles, folded lie,
In the last knot that love could tie.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.
But peace, I must not quarrel with the will Of highest dispensation. Milton's Agonistes.
Silence, ye troubled waves, and, thou deep, peace!
Said then th' omnific word. Milton.

You tell a pedigree
Of three score and two years, a silly time. Shakespeare.
Alterations of surnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce many of them. Cam.
To the old heroes hence was giv'n
A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n. Waller.
The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Athen.
PEDIMENT. n. f. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows and niches:
it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Diſt.
PEDLER. n. f. [a petty dealer; a contraction produced by frequent use.] One who travels the country with small commodities.
All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truffle of trifles at his back;
As bells and babies and glasses in his pack. Spenser.
If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakespeare.
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakesp.
Had fly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.
A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.
Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back,
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.
PEDLERY. adj. [from pedler.] Wares sold by pedlers.
The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to sell. Swift.
PEDDLING. adj. Petty dealing; such as pedlers have.
So slight a pleasure I may part with, and find no mis;
this peddling profit I may resign, and 'twill be no breach in my estate. Decay of Piety.
PEDOBAPTISM. n. f. [παιδός and βάπτισμα.] Infant baptism.
Diſt.
PEDOBAPTIST. n. f. [παιδός and βαπτιστής.] One that holds or practises infant baptism.

PEE

To PEEL. v. a. [pelere, Fr. from pellis.]
1. To decorticate; to flay.
The skilful shepherd peel'd the certain wands, Shakesp.
And stuck them up before the fullsome ewes.
2. [From piller, to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this should be written pill.
Who once just and temperate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
But lust and rapine. Milton's Paradise Regained.
Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden.
PEEL. n. f. [pellis, Latin; pelure, French.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.
PEEL. n. f. [pellet, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.
PEELER. n. f. [from peel.]
1. One who strips or flays.
2. A robber; a plunderer.
Yet otes with her sucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the mailster and worse to some ground. Tusser.
As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opbesien, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from opwieljen, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds:
when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that exprest the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]
1. To make the first appearance.
She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Fa. Queen.
Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unfain'd shepherd. Shakesp.
England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league;
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The timorous maiden-blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from their first blushes; so that now
A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud;
And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Craheav.
With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.
Earth, but not at once, her village rears,
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryden.
Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear, }
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryd. } Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world; and the restorers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.
Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.
Most souls but peep out once an age,
Dull sullen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.
2. To look slyly, closely or curiously; to look through any crevice.
Who is the same, which at my window peeps. Spenser.
Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakesp.
A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclus. xxi. 23.
The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.
All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryden.
The

PEE

The daring flames peep in, and saw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophand by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden
Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons
O my muse, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior
In vain his little children peeping out Into the mingling storm, demand their fire. Thomson

PEEP, n. f.
1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.
2. A fly look.
Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t' other peep at the stars. Swift PEEPER, n. f. Young chickens just breaking the shell.
Dishes I chuse, though little, yet genteel;
Snails the first course, and peepers crown the meal. Bramst.
PEEPHOLE, n. f. [peep and hole.] Hole through which PEEPINGHOLE, n. f. one may look without being discovered.
By the peepholes in his crest,
Is it not virtually confest,
That there his eyes took distant aim. Prior
The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange

PEER, n. f. [pair, French.]
1. Equal; one of the same rank.
His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakefp.
Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity;
and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon
Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him for great respect do'st bear!
That thou adorn'st him with so bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.
In long he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chanticleer. Dryden

3. Companion: fellow.
He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Fairy Queen
If you did move to-night,
In the dances, with what fright
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion swell'd. Benj. Johnson
Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign, Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryd.

4. A nobleman: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.
I see thee compact with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds:
Hail king of Scotland! Shakefp. Macbeth
King Henry's peers and chief nobility Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakefp.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden

TO PEEP, v. n. [By contraction from appear.]
1. To come just in sight.
As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Bacon
Yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakefp. Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shakefp.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johnson
Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milt.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.
Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidn.
Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

PEERAGE, n. f. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]
1. The dignity of a peer.
His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for Lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift

2. The body of peers.
Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden

PEERDOM, n. f. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainsworth

PEERLESS, n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

PEG

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peers and butler share alike the box. Pope

PEERLESS, adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet,
We stand up peerless. Shakefp.

You,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best. Shakefp. Tempest.
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakefp.
Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton
Such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise, Whole lute leads us. Milton
Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With such a peerless majesty the stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden

PEERLESSNESS, n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.

PEEVISH, adj. [This word Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from beefish, as we say wasfish.] Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; iracible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.
For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidn.
She is peevish, fullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shakefp.
If thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls. Shakefp.
I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakefp.
Those deserve to be doubly laugh'd at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estrange

Neither will it be satire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift

PEEVISHLY, adv. [from peevish.] Angriely; querulously; morosely.
He was so peevishly opiniative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward

PEEVISHNESS, n. f. [from peevish.] Irracibility; querulous-ness; fretfulness; perverseness.
Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others, envying the publick should be managed without them. King Charles
It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift

PEG, n. f. [pegge, Teutonic.]
1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.
Solid bodies foreflew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon
The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them claviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff.
Grew's Anatomy

If he pretends to be cholerick, we shall treat him like his little friend Dicky, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison's Guardian, N^o 108.
The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison's Spectator
A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more vir-tuous or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.
You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The pegs that make this music. Shakefp. Othello

3. To take a peg lover; to depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.
Remember how in arms and politics,
We still have work'd all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras

4. The nickname of Margaret.
To PEG, v. a. To fasten with a peg.
I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, 'till Thou'st howl'd away twelve winters. Shakefp. Tempest.
Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn's Calendar

PELF, n. f.

PEL

PELF, n. f. [In low Latin, peltra, not known whence derived; pelisse, in Norman, is frippery.] Money; riches.
The thought of this doth pals all worldly pel. Sidney

Hardy elf,
Thou dar'st view my direful countenance,
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious pel. Fairy Queen

Immortal gods, I crave no pel;
I pray for no man but myself.
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pel
Soon split him on the former self:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace
To the poor if he refus'd his pel,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift

PELLICAN, n. f. [pellicanus, low Lat. pellican, Fr.]
There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pellican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pellican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calmet

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pellican daughters. Shakefp.
The pellican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence

PELLET, n. f. [from pila, Lat. pellet, Fr.]
1. A little ball.
That which is fold to the merchants, is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sandys
I dressed with little pellets of lint. Wifeman's Surgery

2. A bullet; a ball.
The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, left two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon
A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon
How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground. L'Estrange
In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Ray

PELLETED, adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.
My brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding of this pelleted storm, Shakefp. Lear

PELLICLE, n. f. [pellicula, Lat.]
1. A thin skin.
After the discharge of the fluid, the pellicle must be broke.
Sharp's Surgery

2. It is often used for the film which gathers upon liquors impregnated with salts or other substances, and evaporated by heat.

PELLITORY, n. f. [parietaria, Lat.] An herb.
The pellitory hath an apetalous flower, whose flower cup is divided into four parts, which is sometimes bell-shaped like a funnel, with four stamina or threads surrounding the pointal, which becomes for the most part an oblong seed, surrounded by the flower cup; to which may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves. Miller

PELMELL, n. f. [pelte melle, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously;
one among another.
When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then desce each other; and pell mell
Make work upon ourselves. Shakefp. King John Never yet did insurrection want Such moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pelmeil havock and confusion.
He knew when to fall on pelmeil, Henry IV.
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras

PELLS, n. f. [pellis, Lat.]
Clerk of the pelles, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pellis exituum, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey

PELLUCID, adj. [pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opaque; not dark.
The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Woodward
If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehement as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Opticks

PEN

PELLUCIDITY, n. f. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clear-PELLUCIDNESS, n. f. nefs; not opacity.
The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the insensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke
We consider their pellucidness and the vast quantity of light, that passes through them without reflection. Keil

PELT, n. f. [from pellis, Lat.]
1. Skin; hide.
The camels hair is taken for the skin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown's Vulgar Errors
A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden

2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainsworth

PELT-MONGER, n. f. [pellis, Lat. pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.
TO PELT, v. a. [peltern, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.] It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teasing frequency than destructive violence.

1. To strike with something thrown.
Poor naked wretches whereof'er you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shakefp.
Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakefp.
No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelting them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury
The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Gulstover

2. To throw; to cast.
My Phillis me with pelting apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden

PELTING, adj. This word in Shakespeare signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.
Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shakefp. Lear
Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shakefp.
They from sheepcotes and poor pelting villages Enforce their charity. Shakefp.
A tenement or pelting farm. Shakefp.

PELVIS, n. f. [Latin.] The lower part of the belly.

PEN, n. f. [penna, Latin.]
1. An instrument of writing.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shakefp.
Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of Adamant on plates of brass. Dryden
He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden
I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pens, if my eyes be shut. Locke

2. Feather.
The pens that did his pinnions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Fairy Queen

3. Wing; though even here it may mean feather.
Feather'd foon and fledg'd,
They fumm'd their pens; and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton's Paradise Lost

4. [From penna, Saxon.] A small inclosure; a coop.
My father stole two geese out of a pen. Shakefp.
The cook was ordered to dress capons for supper, and take the best in the pen. L'Estrange
She in pen his flocks will fold, Dryden's Horace Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys num'rous as thy hens. King
The gather'd flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable prest'd, Head above head. Thomson's Summer

TO PEN, v. a. [pennan and pinban, Saxon.]
1. To coop; to shut up; to incage; to imprison in a narrow place.
Away with her, Shakefp. Cymbeline
My heavy son
Private in his chamber pens himself. Shakefp.
The plaster alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon
As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

PEN

In hurdled cotes, amid the field secure Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton.
The glass, wherein it is penmed up, hinders it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.
The prevention of mischief is preferred by the Jewish custom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey on Conjunctions.
Ah! that your bus'ness had been mine,
To pen the sheep. Dryden.
2. [From the noun.] To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the stile or composition.
For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearfay pictures, or a window look,
With one good dance or letter finely pen'd. Sidney.
I would be loth to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well pen'd, I have taken great pains to con
it. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Read this challenge, mark but the penning of it. Shakespeare.
A sentence spoken by him in English, and penmed out of his mouth by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthogra phy, was set down by them. Camden's Remains.
He frequented sermons, and penmed notes with his own hand. Hayward on Edward VI.
The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict exa mination, as the penning them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby on the Soul.
Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:
Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
The judges hearing with applause, at th' end Freed him, and said, no fool such lines had pen'd. Denb.
Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without penning of any thing. Locke.
Should I publish the praises that are so well pen'd, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.
Twenty fools I never saw Come with petitions fairly pen'd, Desiring I should stand their friend. Swift.
PENAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from pæna, Lat.]
1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.
Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as shall more effectually incline him to what is brave and be coming than the terror of any penal law. South.
2. Used for the purposes of punishment; vindictive.
Adamantive chains and penal fire. Milton.
PENALTY. n. f. [from penalité, old French.]
1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.
Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and some unto the penalty of contrary affirmations; but the experience of na vigations, can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.
Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all lets penalties, for preserving pro perty, and employing the force of the community in the exe cution of laws. Locke.
Beneath her footstool, science groans in chains,
And wit dreads exile, penalties and pains. Dunciad.
2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.
Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
PENANCE. n. f. [penence, old French; for penitence.] In fiction either public or private, suffered as an expression of

No penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over the pursuit of his right. Bacon.
The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour Calls us to penance. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A Lorain surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to per form this penance in a sharp fit he had. Temple.
PENCE. n. f. The plural of penny; formed from pennies, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.
The same servant found one of his fellow servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Mat.
PENCIL. n. f. [penicillum, Latin.]
1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.
Pencils can by one slight touch restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.
For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,
For thee the grasses lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs. Dryden.

PEN

A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pencil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.
The faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the matter's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.
One dips the pencil, t' other strings the lyre. Pope.
2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write with out ink.
Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Watts.
3. Any instrument of writing without ink.
To PENCIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.
Painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outside: pencil'd figures are Ev'n such as they give out. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
PENDANT. n. f. [pendant, French.]
1. A jewel hanging in the ear.
The spirits
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear. Pope.
2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.
Unripe fruit, whose verdant stalks do cleave
Close to the tree, which grieves no less to leave
The smiling pendant which adorns her so,
And until Autumn, on the bough should grow. Waller.
3. A pendulum. Obsolete.
To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hang'd before. Digby on the Soul.
4. A small flag in ships.
PENDENCE. n. f. [from pendeo, Lat.] Slopeness; inclination.
The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence or slope ness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest top or ridge from the lowest. Wotton's Architecture.
PENDENCY. n. f. [from pendeo, Lat.] Suspense; delay of decision.
The judge shall pronounce in the principal cause, nor can

A person pending suit with the diocesan, shall be defended in the possession. Ayliffe.
PENDULOSITY. n. f. [from pendulous.] The state of hang ing; suspension.
His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is, the humours descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or sup pendaneous stability. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PENDULOUS. adj. [pendulus, Lat.] Hanging; not sup ported below.
All the plagues, that in the pendulous air
Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters. Shak.
Bellerophon's horse, fram'd of iron, and placed between the loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The grinders are furnished with three roots, and in the upper jaw often four, because these are pendulous. Ray.
PENDULUM. n. f. [pendulus, Lat. pendule, Fr.] Any weight hung so as that it may easily swing backwards and forwards, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time.
Upon the bench I will to handle 'em,
That the vibration of this pendulum
Shall make all taylor's yards of one Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.
PENETRABLE. adj. [penetrabilis, Fr. penetrabilis, Latin.]

another body.
Let him try thy dart,
And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.
2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.
I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakespeare.
Peace,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
PENETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrabilis.] Susceptibility of impression from another body.
There being no mean between penetrability and impenetra bility, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Bohne's Philosophical Principles.
PENETRANT. n. f. [penetrantia, Latin.] Interior parts. Not in use.
The heart resists purulent fumes, into whose penetrants to infuse some time must be allowed. Harvey.
PENETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.
The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no ob stacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray on the Creation.
PENETRANT. adj. [penetrant, Fr.] Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.
If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses pro moted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.
The food, mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray.
To PENETRATE. v. a. penetro, Lat. penetrare, Fr.]
1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.
Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetra ting. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. To affect the mind.
3. To reach the meaning.
To PENETRATE. v. n. To make way.
There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to penetrate. Ray.
If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing. Locke.
PENETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrare.]
1. The act of entering into any body.
It warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unseen Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of mo dern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.
3. Acuteness; sagacity.
The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.
PENETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]
1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.
Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any foggy noisomeness from fens. Watson.
2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.
O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The fourth sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. Having the power to impress the mind.
Wouldst thou see
Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame. Shakespeare.
PENETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.
PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Latin.]
1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is sup posed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signi fying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined, that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:
British Indians nam'd from penguins.
Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from punguis, Lat. fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.
The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness:
for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds: his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unuseful for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grew's Museum.
2. A fruit.
The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.
PENINSULA. n. f. [Lat. pena insula; peninsula, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.
A side of Milbrook lieth the peninsula of Infwork, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Carew.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. penitentia, Lat.] Repen tance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amend ments of life or change of the affections.
Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom. Dryden.
May penitence fly round thy mournful bed,
And wing thy latest prayer to pitying heav'n. Irene.
PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. penitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and reso lutely amending life.
Much it joys me
To see you become so penitent. Shakespeare.
Give me
The penitent instrument to pick that bolt. Shakespeare.
Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent befo'ught
The God of their forefathers. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves them penitent. Milton.
The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
PENITENT. n. f.
1. One sorrowful for sin.
Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the in dustry of converted penitents, whose carcasses the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.
The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the ap petites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the tempta tions of sin in their full force. Rogers's Sermons.
2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.
The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded. Stillingfleet.
3. One under the direction of a confessor.
PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.
I have done penance for contenting love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts and penitential groans. Shakespeare.
Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlic, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a deified onion? South's Sermons.
PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitential, Fr. penitentialis, low Latin.]
A book directing the degrees of penance.
The penitentials or book of penance contained such mat ters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconci liation of the person that suffered penance. Ayliffe.
PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. penitentiarius, low Latin.]
1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.
Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight pen ance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.
The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. A penitent; one who does penance.
A prison restrain'd John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the fame in his unruly mayoralty of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Carew.

1. One who professes the art of writing.
2. An author; a writer.
The four evangelists, within fifty years after our Saviour's death, configned to writing that history, which had been pub lished only by the apostles and disciples: the further conside ration of these holy penmen will fall under another part of this discourse. Addison on the Christian Religion.
The descriptions which the evangelists give, shew that both our blessed Lord and the holy penmen of his story were deeply affected. Atterbury.
PENNACHED. adj. [pennachis, Fr.] Is only applied to flowers when the ground of the natural colour of their leaves is ra diated and diversified neatly without any confusion. Trevoux.
Carefully protect from violent rain your pennached tulips, covering them with matrasles. Evelyn.

 With pennons painted in the blood of Harleuer. Shakefp.
 High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
 His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur. Dryden.
PENNY. n. f. plural pence. [peniz, Saxon.]
 1. A small coin, of which twelve make a shilling: a penny is the radical denomination from which English coin is numbered, the copper halfpence and farthings being only nummorum famuli, a subordinate species of coin.
 She sighs and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
 No silver penny to reward her pain. Dryden.
 One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
 Does at a penny's cost in herbs repine. Dryden.
 2. Proverbially. A small sum.
 You shall hear
 The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
 In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
 Of any penny tribute paid. Shakefp.
 We will not lend thee a penny. Shakefp.
 Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe. Taylor's Living Holy.
 3. Money in general.
 Pepper and Sabeen incense take;
 And with post-haste thy running markets make;
 Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.
 It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny. Swift's Miscellanies.
PENNYROYAL, or pudding grass. n. f. [pulegium, Lat.]
Pennyroyal hath a labiated flower consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is entire, but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts; out of the flower cup rises the point attended by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds: to which may be added, that the flowers grow in short thick whorles. Miller.
PENNYWEIGHT. n. f. [penny and weight.] A weight containing twenty-four grains Troy weight.
 The Sevil piece of Eight is 1; pennyweight in the pound selves. Bacon.

PENNYWORTH. n. f. [penny and worth.]
 1. As much as is bought for a penny.
 2. Any purchase; any thing bought or sold for money.
 As for corn it is nothing natural, save only for barley and oats, and some places for rye; and therefore the larger penny- worths may be allowed to them. Spenser on Ireland.
 Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,
 And purchase friends. Shakefp.
 You know I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin, French nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English.
Shakefp.
 Lucian affirms, that the souls of usurers after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and fides by cudgel and spur. Peacbam.
 Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South's Sermons.
 3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.
 For fame he pray'd, but let the event declare
 He had no mighty pennyworth of his pray'r. Dryden.

 My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who displease me least. Swift.

PEN

PENSILE. adj. [pensilis, Latin.]
 1. Hanging; suspended.
 There are two trepidations; the one manifest and local, as of the bell when it is pensile; the other, secret of the minute parts.
 This ethereal space,
 Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,
 Anxious I ask you, how the pensile ball Should never strive to rise, nor never fear to fall. Prior.
 2. Supported above the ground.
 The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
 Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
 On which the planted grove and pensile garden grows. Prior.
PENSILENESS. n. f. [from pensile.] The state of hanging.
PENSION. n. f. [pension, Fr.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. In England it is generally understood to mean pay given to a state hireling for treason to his country.
 A charity bestowed on the education of her young subjects has more merit than a thousand pensions to those of a higher fortune. Addison's Guardian, N° 105.
 He has liv'd with the great without flattery, and been a friend to men in power without pensions. Pope.
TO PENSION. v. a. [from the noun.] To support by an arbitrary allowance.
 One might expect to see medals of France in the highest perfection, when there is a society pensioned and set apart for the designing of them. Addison on Ancient Medals.
 The hero William and the martyr Charles,
 One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.
PENSIONARY. adj. [pensionnaire, French.] Maintained by pensions.

 —My leisure serves me, penfive daughter, now. Shakefp.
 Anxious cares the penfive nymph oppress,
 And secret passions labour'd in her breast. Pope.
 2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.
 We at the sad approach of death shall know
 The truth, which from these penfive numbers flow,
 That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe. Prior.
PENSIVELY. adv. [from penfive.] With melancholy; sorrow-fully; with gloomy seriousness.
 So fair a lady did I spy,
 On herbs and flowers she walked *penfive*ly
 Mild, but yet love she proudly did forsake. Spenser.
PENSIVENESS. n. f. [from penfive.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.
 Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath *penfive*ness and fear, the other always joy annexed. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
 Would'st thou unlock the door
 To cold despair and gnawing *penfive*ness. Herbert.
PENT. part. pass. of pen. Shut up.
 Cut my lace asunder,
 That my pent heart may have some scope to beat. Shakefp.

 unfrequent mention of the angels. Bentley.
PENTECOST. n. f. [pentecosté; pentecoste, Fr.] A feast among the Jews.
Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover: they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Calmet.
 'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will Some five and twenty years. Shakefp.
PENTECOSTAL. adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitfun-tide.
 I have composed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects with some little variation; as the collects ad-ventual, quadragesimal, paschal or pentecostal. Sanderfon.
PENTHOUSE. n. f. [pent, from pen, Fr. and house.] A shed hanging out aloft from the main wall.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores,
In all the arterial perforated thorcs.

PER

The aperture was limited by an opaque circle placed between the eye-glass and the eye, and perforated in the middle with a little round hole for the rays to pass through to the eye.
Worms perforate the guts.
PERFORATION. n. f. [from perforare.]
1. The act of piercing or boring.
The likeliest way is the perforation of the body of the tree in several places one above another, and the filling of the holes.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, and the drawing the tendons of the third joints through them.
2. Hole; place bored.
That the nipples should be made spongy, and with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, are arguments of providence.
PERFORATOR. n. f. [from perforare.] The instrument of boring.
The patient placed in a convenient chair, dipping the trocar in oil, stab it suddenly through the teguments, and withdrawing the perforator, leave the waters to empty by the canula.
PERFORATE. adv. [per and force.] By violence; violently.
Guyon to him leaping, flaid
His hand, that trembled as one terrified;
And though himself were at the sight dismay'd,
Yet him perforate restrain'd.
Jealous Oberon would have the child,
But the perforate withholds the loved boy.
All trembling and arising, full of spots,
And pale with death at hand, perforate the breaks
Into the inmost rooms.
To PERFORM. v. a. [performare, Italian.] To execute; to do; to discharge; to achieve an undertaking; to accomplish.
All three set among the foremost ranks of fame for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.
Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I had thee?
What cannot you and I perform upon Th' unguarded Duncan?
I will cry unto God that performeth all things for me.
Let all things be performed after the law of God diligently.
Thou, my love,
Perform his fun'erals with paternal care.
You perform her office in the sphere,
Born of her blood, and make a new Platonick year.
To PERFORM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.
When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errors.
PERFORMABLE. adj. [from perform.] Practicable; such as may be done.
Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them.
PERFORMANCE. n. f. [from perform.]
1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing.
Promising is the very air o' th' time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people, the deed is quite out of use.
Perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance.
The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt.
2. Compulsion; work.
In the good poems of other men, I can only be sure, that 'tis the hand of a good master; but in your performances 'tis scarcely possible for me to be deceived.
Few of our comic performances give good examples.
3. Action; something done.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say?

The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer.
2. It is generally applied to one that makes a publick exhibition of his skill.
To PERFUMATE. v. n. [perfumo, Lat.] To rub over.
PERFUMATORY. adj. [from perfumo.] That which perfumes.
PERFUME. n. f. [perfume, Fr.]
1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.
Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfumes you can take but at times.
Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly waited, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it.
2. Sweet odour; fragrance.
No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield.
To PERFUME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.
Your papers
Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For he is sweeter than perfume itself
To whom they go.
Why rather, sleep, lie thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd.
The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan.
Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal.
The pains the takes are vainly meant,
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art.
See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies!
PERFUMER. n. f. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.
A moss the perfumers have out of apple trees, that hath an excellent scent.
First issued from perfumers shops
A croud of fashionable fops.
PERFUMCTORILY. adv. [perfumctorie, Lat.] Carelessly; negligently.
His majesty casting his eye perfumctorily upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord-keeper.
Whereas all logic is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle perfumctorily; of the fourth he has said nothing at all.
PERFUMCTORY. adj. [perfumctorie, Lat.] Slight; careless; negligent.
A transient and perfumctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected.
To PERFUSE. v. a. [perfuso, Lat.] To tincture; to overspread.
These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions.
PERHAPS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure; it may be.
Perhaps the good old man that kils'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run.
Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place.
His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love.
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps lost pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him.
PERIAPT. n. f. [περιπτεω] Amulet; charm worn as preservatives against diseases or mischief.
The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly;
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts.
PERICARDIUM. n. f. [περικαρδιον; pericarde, Fr.]
The pericardium is a thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion.
PERICARPUM. n. f. [περικαρπιον; Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelops the seed.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals.
PERICLITATION. n. f. [from periclitari, Lat. periclitari, Fr.]
1. The state of being in danger.
2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRANIUM.

PER

PERICRANIUM. n. s. [from περι and cranium; pericrâne, Fr.] The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.
Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wifeman's Surgery.
PERICULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Lat.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. A word not in use.
As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculuous periods. Brown.
PERIECY. n. s. [περι and εκυ.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.
PERIGEE. n. s. [περι and γει; perigée, Fr.] Is a point in PERIGEUM. the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.
By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERIHELUM. n. s. [περι and ήλιος; perihelie, Fr.] Is that point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.
Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling. Chyene's Philosophical Principles.
PERIL. n. s. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dutch; periculum, Lat.] 1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.
Dear Pyrocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney, b. ii.
How many perils do unfold
The righteous man to make him daily fall. Fairy Queen.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way.
Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbutnot.
2. Denunciation; danger denounced.
I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
PERILOUS. adj. [perileus, Fr. from peril.] 1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.
Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
Her guard is chastity,
She that has that is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.
Dictate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful fear:
For perilous th' assay, unheard the toil
T' elude the preference of a God by guile. Pope.
Into the perilous flood Bear fearless. Thomson.
2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.
Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous threwd. Hudibras.
3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit, do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous.
'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare.
PERILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.
PERILOUSNESS. n. s. [from perilous.] Dangeroufness.
PERIMETER. n. s. [περι and μετρον; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.
By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton's Opticks.
PERIOD. n. s. [periode, Fr. περιόδος.] 1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.
Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

PER

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at beginning.
A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end too, and then begins again as often as it ends. Holder on Time.
We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.
4. The end or conclusion.
If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakespeare.
There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods.
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.
5. The state at which any thing terminates.
Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates.
Light-conversing fates must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.
6. Length of duration.
Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon's Natural History.
7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.
Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Johnson.
Is this the confidence you gave me,
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.
Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrap up in a smooth period. Locke.
For the assistance of weak memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
From the tongue
Th' unfinished period falls. Thomson's Spring.
To PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.
Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
PERIODICAL. adj. [periodique, Fr. from period.] 1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.
Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.
Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.
Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some stinky soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.
3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.
The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.
4. Relating to periods or revolutions.
It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.
PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.
The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, and then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Broome.
PERIOSTEUM. n. s. [περι and στέον; periofte, Fr.] All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Chyene's Philosophical Principles.
PERIPHERY. n. s. [περι and φειρα; peripherie, Fr.] Circumference.
Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.
To PERIPHERASE. v. a. [periphrazein, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.
PERIPHRASTIS. n. s. [περιφρασις; periphraze, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one; as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.
They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphraze for this number seven. Brown.
She contains all bliss,
And makes the world but her periphraze. Cleaveland.
They

PER

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphraze on every word of the book they explain. Watts.
The periphraze and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.
PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphrazein.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.
PERIPNEUMONY. n. s. [περι and πνευμων; peripneumonie, Fr.] An inflammation of the lungs.
Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then depreded schirrous, by dissipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that remain, or may be left indurated, through the grois reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.
A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.
To PERISH. v. n. [perir, Fr. perere, Lat.] 1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing.
I burn, I pine, I perish. Shakespeare.
If I achieve not this young modest girl,
If I have seen any perish for want of cloathing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade. Job xxxi. 29.
He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job xxxiii. 18.
They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 18.
I perish with hunger. Luke xv. 17.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.
Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.
Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.
Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.
In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.
2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.
Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whole parts exist together. Locke.
3. To be lost eternally.
These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter ii. 12.
O suffer me not to perish in my sins, Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish. Moreton's Daily Exercise.
To PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged fides;
Because thy stony heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Rite, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.
He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier on Friendship.
Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.
PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.
We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.
To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.
It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians.
Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.
Thrice has he seen the perishable kind Of men decay. Pope's Odyssey.
PERISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liablefness to be destroyed; liablefness to decay.
Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonfness and perishablefness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge his possessions beyond the use of his family. Locke.
PERISTALTICK. adj. [περισταλτικ; peristaltique, Fr.] Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbutnot.
PERISTERION. n. s. The herb vervain. Diels.
PERISTYLE. n. s. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.
The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbutnot on Coins.

PERJURER. n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.
The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.
PERJURY. n. s. [perjurius, Lat.] False oath.
My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud — What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence,
And to he vanish'd. Shakespeare, Richard III.
PERIWIG. n. s. [peruque, Fr.] Adscitious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakespeare.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare.
The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers fonnets. Donne.
Madam time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd.
For vailing of their villages his highness and the marquis bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.
They used false hair or periwigs. Arbutnot on Coins.
From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes,
Which in the nicest fashion curl'd,
Like toupets. Swift's Miscellanies.
To PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.
Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvestre.
Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antick shapes,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides she takes. Swift's Miscellanies.
PERIWINKLE. n. s. 1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish snail.
Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevel'd about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and ecalop shells. Peacocks.
2. A plant.
The periwinkle hath a flower cup, consisting of one leaf, that is divided into five long narrow segments: the flower also consists of one leaf, which expands in form of a salver, and is cut into five broad segments: the pointal, which arises from the center of the flower cup, becomes a fruit composed of two husks or pods, which contain oblong, cylindrical, furrowed seeds; to which may be added, that this plant shoots out many long creeping branches that strike out roots at their joints. Miller.
There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.
The common simples with us are comfrey, bugle, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wifeman's Surgery.
To PERKE.

PER

TO PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.
If you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's mits thus perks it in your face,
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
Let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crouds, and stare the strumpet down. Pope.
TO PERK. v. a. To dres; to prank.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glit'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
PERK. adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.
My ragged ronts
Wont in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails, Peak as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenser.

Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [from perpetrare, Lat. perpetrare, Fr.]
1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.
Hear of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;
But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate's Juvenal.
My tender infants or my careful fire,
These they returning will to death require,
Will perpetrate on them the first design,
And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.
The forest, which in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.
2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.
Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit;
For whatso'er we perpetrate,
We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.
PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrare.]
1. The act of committing a crime.
A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have honested a meer private revenge. Watson.

PERVIOUS. adj. [from pervius, Latin.]
1. Admitting passage; capable of being permeated.
The Egyptians used to say, that unknown darkness is the first principle of the world; by darkness they mean God, whose secrets are pervious to no eye. Taylor.
Leda's twins
Conspicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe,
Nor had they mis'd; but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the speed. Dryden.
Those lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, decayed in tract of time, and rotted at length. Woodward.
2. Pervading; permeating. This sense is not proper.
What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This fluttring motion which we call the mind? Prior.
PERVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervious.] Quality of admitting a passage.
The *pervious*ness of our receiver to a body much more subtle than air, proceeded partly from the looser texture of that glass the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glass. Boyle.
There will be found another difference besides that of *pervious*ness. Hodder's Elements of Speech.
PERUKE. n. f. [from peruque, Fr.] A cap of false hair; a perwig I put him on a linen cap, and his peruke over that. Wijeman.

PERUKEMAKER. n. f. [from peruke and maker.] A maker of perukes; a wigmaker.
PERUSAL. [from peruse.] The act of reading.
As pieces of miniature must be allowed a closer inspection, so this treatise requires application in the perusal. Woodward.
If upon a new perusal you think it is written in the very spirit of the ancients, it deserves your care, and is capable of being improved. Aitbury.
To PERUSE. v. a. [from peruse.] To read.
1. To read.
Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason. Shakespeare. Richard II.
The petitions being thus prepared, do you constantly set apart an hour in a day to peruse those petitions. Bacon.
Carefully observe, whether he tastes the distinguishing perfections or the specifick qualities of the author whom he peruses. Addison's Spectator, N° 409.
2. To observe; to examine.
I hear the enemy;
Out some light horsemen, and peruse their wings. Shakespeare.
I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakespeare.
Myself I then perus'd, and limb by limb Survey'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PERUSER. n. f. [from peruse.] A reader; examiner.
The difficulties and hesitations of every one will be according to the capacity of each peruser, and as his penetration into nature is greater or less. Woodward.
PESADE. n. f.
Pesade is a motion a horse makes in raising or lifting up his forequarters, keeping his hind legs upon the ground without stirring. Farrier's Dict.

PESSARY.

PEST. n. f. [from peste, Fr. pestis, Lat.]
1. Plague; pestilence.
Let fierce Achilles
The god propitiate, and the pest assuage. Pope.
2. Any thing mischievous or destructive.
The pest a virgin's face and bosom bears,
High on her crown a rising snake appears,
Guards her black front, and hisses in her hairs. Pope.
At her words the hellish pest Forbore. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Of all virtues justice is the best;
Valour without it is a common pest. Waller.
To PESTER. v. a. [from pester, Fr.]
1. To disturb; to perplex; to harass; to turmoil.
Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing the surrender of those lands. Shakespeare.
We are pestered with mice and rats, and to this end the cat is very serviceable. More's Antidote against Atheism.
They did so much pester the church and grossly delude the people, that contradictions themselves asserted by Rabbits were equally revered by them as the infallible will of God. South's Sermons.
A multitude of scribblers daily pester the world with their insufferable stuff. Dryden.
At home he was pester'd with noise;
Abroad was pester'd by the boys. Swift.
2. To encumber.
Fitches and pease
For pestering too much on a hovel they lay.

Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton.
PESTERER. n. f. [from pester.] One that pesters or disturbs.
PESTERING. adj. [from pester.] Encumbering; cumbersome.
In the statute against vagabonds note the dislike the parliament had of goaling them, as that which was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon's Henry VII.
PESTHOUSE. n. f. [from pest and house.] An hospital for persons infected with the plague.
PESTIFEROUS. adj. [from pestifer, Lat.]
1. Destructive; mischievous.
Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy leud, pestiferous and dissentious pranks,
The very infants prattle of thy pride.
You, that have discover'd secrets, and made such pestiferous reports of men nobly held, must die. Shakespeare.
2. Pestilential; malignant; infectious.
It is easy to conceive how the steams of pestiferous bodies taint the air, while they are alive and hot. Arbutnot.
PESTILENCE. n. f. [from pestilencia, Fr. pestilentia, Lat.] Plague; pest; contagious distemper.
The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakespeare.
When my eyes beheld Olivia first,
Methought she purg'd the air of pestilence. Shakespeare.
PESTILENT. adj. [from pestilent, Fr. pestilens, Lat.]
1. Producing plague; malignant.
Great ringing of bells in populous cities dissipated pestilent air, which may be from the concussion of the air, and not from the sound. Bacon's Natural History.
To those people that dwell under or near the equator, a perpetual spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable summer. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Mischievous; destructive.
There is nothing more contagious and pestilent than some kinds of harmony; than some nothing more strong and potent unto good. Hooker, b. v. f. 38.
Hoary moulded bread the soldiers thrusting upon their spears raised against king Ferdinand, who with such corrupt and pestilent bread would feed them. Knolles.
Which president, of pestilent import, Against thee, Henry, had been brought.
The world abounds with pestilent books, written against this doctrine. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. In ludicrous language, it is used to exaggerate the meaning of another word.
One pestilent fine,
His beard no bigger though than thine,
Walked on before the rest. Suckling.
PESTILENTIAL. adj. [from pestilenciel, Fr. pestilens, Lat.]
1. Partaking of the nature of pestilence; producing pestilence; infectious; contagious.
These with the air passing into the lungs, infect the mass of blood, and lay the foundation of pestilential fevers. Woodward.

Fire involv'd
In pestilential vapours, stench and smogk. Addison.
2. Mischievous; destructive; pernicious.
If government depends upon religion, then this shews the pestilential design of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests. South's Sermons.
PETILENTLY. adv. [from pestilent.] Mischievously; destructively.
PETILLATION. n. f. [from petillum, Lat.] The act of pounding or breaking in a mortar.
The best diamonds are comminable, and so far from breaking hammers, that they submit unto petillation, and resist not any ordinary pettle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PETILE. n. f. [from petillum, Lat.] An instrument with which any thing is broken in a mortar.
What real alteration can the beating of the pettle make in any body, but of the texture of it. Locke.
Upon our vegetable food the teeth and jaws act as the pettle and mortar. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PETILE OF PORK. n. f. A gammon of bacon. Dimf.
PET. n. f. [This word is of doubtful etymology; from despit, Fr. or impetus, Lat. perhaps it may be derived some way from petit, as it implies only a little fume or fret.]
1. A slight passion; a slight fit of anger.
If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
Th' all-giver would be unthankt, would be unprais'd. Milton.
If we cannot obtain every vain thing we ask, our next business is to take pet at the refusal. L'Estrange.
Life, given for noble purposes, must not be thrown up in a pet, nor whined away in love. Collier.
They cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray. Pope.

PETAL. n. f. [from petalum, Latin.]
Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants: whence plants are distinguished into monopetalous, whose flower is one continued leaf; tripetalous, pentapetalous and polypetalous, when they consist of three, five or many leaves. Quincy.
PETALOUS. adj. [from petal.] Having petals.
PETAR. n. f. [from petard, Fr. petardo, Italian.]
PETARD. n. f. [from petard.]
A petard is an engine of metal, almost in the shape of an hat, about seven inches deep, and about five inches over at the mouth: when charged with fine powder well beaten, it is covered with a madrier or plank, bound down fast with ropes, running through handles, which are round the rim near the mouth of it: this petard is applied to gates or barriers of such places as are designed to be surprized, to blow them up; they are also used in countermines to break through into the enemies galleries. Military Dict.
'Tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Find all his having and his holding,
Reduc'd t' eternal noise and scolding;
The conjugal petard that tears
Down all portcullises of cars. Hudibras.
PETECHIAL. adj. [from petechia, Lat.] Pestilentially spotted.
In London are many fevers with buboes and carbuncles, and many petechial or spotted fevers. Arbutnot.
PETTER-WORT. n. f. This plant differs from St. John's-wort, only in having a pyramidal seed-vessel, divided into five cells. Miller.
PETIT. adj. [French.] Small; inconsiderable.
By what small petit hints does the mind recover a vanishing notion? South's Sermons.
PETITION. n. f. [from petitio, Latin.]
1. Request; intreaty; supplication; prayer.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.
My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women. Shakespeare.
Let my life be given at my petition, and my people at my request. Esther vii. 3.
Thou didst choose this house to be called by thy name, and to be a house of prayer and petition for thy people. 1 Mac. vii.
2. Single branch or article of a prayer.
Then pray'd that the might still possess his heart,
And no pretending rival share a part;
This last petition heard of all her pray'r. Dryden.
To PETITION. v. a. [from the noun.] To solicit; to supplicate.
You have petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
The mother petitioned her goddess to bestow upon them the greatest gift that could be given. Addison.

PETITIONARILY.

PET

PETITIONARILY. adv. [from petitionary.] By way of begging the question.

This doth but petitionarily infer a dextrality in the heavens, and we may as reasonably conclude a right and left laterality in the ark of Noah. Brown.

PETITIONARY. n. f. [from petition.]

1. Supplicatory; coming with petitions.

Pardon thy petitionary countrymen.

It is our base petitionary breath.

2. Containing petitions or requests.

Petitionary prayer belongeth only to such as are in themselves impotent, and stand in need of relief from others. Hosker.

I return only yes or no to petitionary and petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Swift.

PETITIONER. n. f. [from petition.] One who offers a pe-

tion.

When you have received the petitions, and it will please the petitioners well to deliver them into your own hand, let your secretary first read them, and draw lines under the ma-

What pleasure can it be to be encumbered with dependences, thronged and surrounded with petitioners?

Their prayers are to the reproach of the petitioners, and to the confusion of vain desires. L'Estrange.

His woes broke out, and begg'd relief

With tears, the dumb petitioners of grief. Dryden.

The Roman matrons presented a petition to the fathers;

this raised so much rillery upon the petitioners, that the ladies never after offered to direct the lawgivers of their country. Addison.

PETITORY. adj. [from petitorius, Lat. petitorius, Fr.] Petitioning; claiming the property of any thing. Ains.

PETRE. n. f. [from petra, a stone.] Nitre; salt petre. See

NITRE.

Powder made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

The vessel was first well sealed to prevent cracking, and covered to prevent the falling in of any thing, that might unseasonably kindle the petre. Boyle.

Nitre, while it is in its native state, is called petre-salt, when refined salt-petre. Woodward.

PETRESCENT. adj. [from petrescens, Lat.] Growing stone; becoming stone. Boyle.

A cave, from whose arched roof there dropped down a petrescent liquor, which oftentimes before it could fall to the ground congealed. Boyle.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [from petrifico, Lat.]

1. The act of turning to stone; the state of being turned to stone.

Its concretion spirit has the seeds of petrification and gorgon within itself. Brown.

2. That which is made stone.

Look over the variety of beautiful shells, petrifications, ores, minerals, stones, and other natural curiosities. Cheyne.

PETRIFACTIVE. [from petrificio, Lat.] Having the power to form stone.

There are many to be found, which are but the lapi-descentes and petrification mutation of bodies. Brown.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [from petrification, Fr. from petrify.] A body formed by changing other matter to stone.

In these strange petrifications, the hardening of the bodies seems to be effected principally, if not only, as in the induration of the fluid substances of an egg into a chick, by altering the disposition of their parts. Boyle.

PETRIFICK. adj. [from petrificus, Lat.] Having the power to change to stone.

The aggregated soil

Death with his mace petrified, cold and dry,

As with a trident, smote. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TO PETRIFY. v. a. [from petrifier, Fr. petra and facio, Lat.] To change to stone.

Schism is mark'd out by the apostle to the Hebrews, as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces induration. Decay of Piety.

Though their souls be not yet wholly petrified, yet every act of sin makes gradual approaches to it. Decay of Piety.

A few resemble petrified wood.

Full in the midst of Euclid dip at once,

And petrify a genius to a dunce. Pope.

TO PETRIFY. v. n. To become stone.

Like Niobe we marble grow,

And petrify with grief. Dryden.

PETROL. n. f. [from petrole, Fr.]

PETROLEUM. n. f. [from petroleum, Fr.]

Petrol or petroleum is a liquid bitumen, black, floating on the water of springs. Woodward.

PETRONEL. n. f. [from petronel, Fr.] A pistol; a small gun used by a horseman.

And he with petronel upheav'd,

Instead of shield the blow receiv'd,

The gun recoil'd as well it might. Hudibras.

PETTICOAT. n. f. [from petit and coat.] The lower part of a wo-

PET

What trade art thou, Fuble?—a woman's tailor, fir.—

Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakespeare.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,

Like little mice, stole in and out,

As if they fear'd the light. Suckling.

It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shewn in petticoats. Addison.

To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,

We trust th' important charge, the petticoat;

Oft have we known that sevenfold fence to fail,

Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

PETTIFOGGER. n. f. [corrupted from pettivoguer; petit and voguer, Fr.] A petty small-rate lawyer.

The worst conditioned and least cliented pettivoguers get;

under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Your pettivoggers damn their souls

To share with knaves in cheating fools. Hudibras.

Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettivoggers; there is hardly a plea between two country equires about a barren acre, but you draw your self in as bail, surety or solicitor. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

Physicians are apt to despise empiricks, lawyers, petti- voggers, merchants and pedlars. Swift.

PETTINESS. n. f. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimportance.

The losses we have borne, the subjects we Have lost, and the disgrace we have digested;

To answer which, his pettiness would bow under. Shakespeare.

PETTISH. adj. [from pet.] Fretful; peevish.

Nor doth their childhood prove their innocence;

They're froward, pettish, and unus'd to smile. Crech.

PETTISHNESS. n. f. [from pettish.] Fretfulness; peevishness.

Like children, when we lose our favourite plaything, we throw away the rest in a fit of pettishness. Collier.

PETTY. n. f. [from petty and toe.]

1. The feet of a sucking pig.

2. Feet in contempt.

My good clown grew so in love with the wenches long, that he would not stir his pettys, till he had both tune and words. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

PETTY. [Italian.] The breast; figurative by privacy.

PETTY. adj. [from petit, Fr.] Small; inconsiderable; inferior; little.

When he had no power;

But was a petty servant to the state, Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He was your enemy.

It is a common experience, that dogs know the dog-killer;

when, as in time of infection, some petty fellow is sent out to kill the dogs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It importeth not much, some petty alteration or difference

it may make. Bacon.

Will God incense his ire

For such a petty trespass. Milton.

From thence a thousand lesser poets sprung,

Like petty princes from the fall of Rome. Denham.

They believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who when he propos'd to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon and stars, as petty gods. Stillington.

By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.

Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine. Addison.

Can there an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the pettist prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner. Swift's Miscellanies.

PETTCOY. n. f. An herb.

PETULANCE. n. f. [from petulantia, Fr. petulantia, Lat.] Saucy-ness; pettishness; wantonness.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulancy of our words. Ben. Johnson.

Such was others petulancy, that they joyed to see their bet-ters shamefully outraged and abused. King Charles.

Wife men knew that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.

However their numbers, as well as their insolence and per-verfeness increased, many instances of petulancy and scurrility are to be seen in their pamphlets. Swift.

There appears in our age a pride and petulancy in youth, zealous to cast off the sentiments of their fathers and teachers. Watt's Logick.

PETULANT. adj. [from petulantia, Lat. petulantia, Fr.]

1. Saucy; perverse.

If the opponent sees victory to incline to his side, let him show the force of his arguments, without too importunate petulant demands of an answer. Watt.

2. Wanton.

PHA

2. Wanton.

The tongue of a man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one should not lay too great stress upon any present speeches and opinions. Spektor, N° 439.

PETULANTLY. adv. [from petulant.] With petulance; with saucy pertness.

PEW. n. f. [from pieve, Dutch.] A seat inclosed in a church.

When Sir Thomas More was lord chancellor, he did use, at mass, to sit in the chancel, and his lady in a pew. Bacon.

Should our sex take it into their heads to wear trunk breeches at church, a man and his wife would fill a whole pew. Addison.

PEWET. n. f. [from piewit, Dutch.]

full of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton's Opticks.

PHILANTHROPY. n. f. [Φιλανθρωπία, Lat. philanthropia, Fr.] Love of mankind; good nature.
Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison's Spectator, N° 177.

PHILIPPICK. adj. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon.] Any invective declamation.

PHILOLOGER. n. f. [Φιλολόγος, Lat. philologus, Fr.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critic.
Philologers and critical discourses, who look beyond the shell and obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.
You expect, that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologer. Boyle.
The best philologers say, that the original word does not only signify domestic, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Sprat's Sermons.

PHILOLOGICAL. adj. [from philology.] Critical; grammatical.
Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetoric, poetry and criticism. Watts.
He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critic himself in philological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrases, commentators or other critics, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

PHILOLOGIST. n. f. [Φιλολόγος, Lat. philologus, Fr.] A critic; a grammarian.

PHILOLOGY. n. f. [Φιλολογία, Lat. philologia, Fr.] Criticism; grammatical learning.

PHILOSOPHER. n. f. [φιλόσοφος, Lat. philosophus, Fr.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.
Many found in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

That stone
Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.
Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South's Sermons.
They all our fam'd philosophers desire,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.
If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

PHILOSOPHERS. stone. n. f. A stone dreamed of by alchemists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

PHILOSOPHICK. adj. [philosophique, Fr. from philosophy.]

PHILOSOPHICAL. adj. [philosophique, Fr. from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.
Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The stoic last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue; and his virtuous man, Wife, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.
How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone. Prior.
When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perdition. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.
We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and cauleless. Shakefp.
Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury's Sermon.

PHL

3. Frugal; abstemious.
This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.
The law of commonweales that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.
No man has ever treated the passion of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.
If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not found very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley's Sermons.

TO PHILOSOPHIZE. v. a. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to enquire into the causes of effects.
Qualities, that were occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glanvill's Serp.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning, made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. L'Estrange.
Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.
Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHY. n. f. [φιλοσοφία, Lat. philosophia, Fr.] 1. Knowledge natural or moral.
I had never read, heard nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my recour. Sidney.
Hang up philosophy;
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakefp.
The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Digby.

3. Condition; state. A word of contempt and ridicule.

How can't thou in this pickle? Shakespere.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes; his way was to dawb 'em with ointments, and while she was in that pickle, carry off a spoon. L'Estrange.

Poor Umbra, left in this abandon'd pickle, E'en fits him down. Swift's Miscellanies.

PICKLE or pickel. n. f. A small parcel of land inclosed with a hedge, which in some countries is called a pingle. Phillips.

To PICKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To preserve in pickle.

Autumnal cornels next in order serv'd,
In lees of wine well pickl'd and preserv'd. Dryden.

They shall have all, rather than make a war;
The Straits, the Guiney-trade, the herrings too;
Nay, to keep friendship, they shall pickle you. Dryden.

2. To season or imbue highly with any thing bad; as, a pickled rogue, or one consummately villainous.

PICKLEHERRING. n. f. [from pickle and herring.] A jack-pudding; a merry-andrew; a zany; a buffoon.

Another branch of pretenders to this art, without horse or pickleherring, lie snug in a garret. Spectator, N° 572.

The pickleherring found the way to shake him, for upon his whistling a country jig, this unlucky wag danced to it with such a variety of grimaces, that the countryman could not forbear smiling, and lost the prize. Addison's Spectator.

PICKLOCK. n. f. [from pick and lock.]

1. An instrument by which locks are opened without the key.

We take him to be a thief too, Sir; for we have found upon him, Sir, a strange picklock. Shakespere.

Scipio, having such a picklock, would spend so many years in battering the gates of Carthage. Brown.

It corrupts faith and justice, and is the very picklock that opens the way into all cabinets. L'Estrange.

Thou rais'd'st thy voice to describe the powerful Betty or the artful picklock, or Vulcan sweating at his forge, and stamping the queen's image on viler metals. Arbutnot.

2. The person who picks locks.

PICKPOCKET. n. f. [from pick and pocket.] A thief who steals, by putting his hand privately into the pocket or purse.

I think he is not a pickpurse nor a horsetealer. Shakespere.

It is reasonable, when Esquire South is losing his money to sharpers and pickpockets, I should lay out the fruits of my honest industry in a law suit. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

Pickpockets and highwaymen observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley's Sermons.

His fellow pickpurse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fob. Swift.

PICKTHANK. n. f. [from pick and thank.] An officious fellow, who does what he is not desired; a whispering parasite.

With pleasing tales his lord's vain ears he fed,
A flatterer, a pickthank, and a lyer. Fairfax.

Many tales devis'd,
Of the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By smiling pickthanks and base newsmongers. Shakesp.

The business of a pickthank is the basest of offices. L'Estrange.

If he be great and powerful, spies and pickthanks generally provoke him to persecute and tyrannize over the innocent and the just. South's Sermons.

PICTE. n. f. [from pietus, Lat.] A painted person.

Your neighbours would not look on you as men,
But think the nations all turn'd piets again. Lee.

PICTORIAL. adj. [from pictor, Lat.] Produced by a painter.

A word not adopted by other writers, but elegant and useful.

Sea horses are but grotesco delineations, which fill up empty spaces in maps, as many pictorial inventions, not any physical shapes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PICTURE. n. f. [from pictura, Latin.]

1. A resemblance of persons or things in colours.

Madam, if that your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber. Shakesp.

Pictures and shapes are but secondary objects, and please only displeased but in memory. Bacon's Natural History.

Devouring what he saw so well design'd,
He with an empty picture fed his mind. Dryden.

Love is like the painter, who, being to draw the picture of a friend having a blemish in one eye, would picture only the other side of his face. South's Sermons.
2. To represent.
All filled with these rueful spectacles of so many wretched carcasses starving, that even I, that do but hear it from you, and do picture it in my mind, do greatly pity it. Spenser.
Fond man,
See here thy picture'd life. Thomson's Winter.
- TO PIDDLE. v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from picalo, Italian; or petit, Fr. little; Mr. Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh bryta, to eat; perhaps it comes from peddles, for Skinner gives for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]
1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.
From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lady breeding. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. To trifle; to attend to small parts rather than to the main. Anst.
- PIDDLER. n. f. [from piddle.] One that eats squeamishly, and without appetite.
- PIE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from biezan, to build, that is to build of paste; by Junius derived by contraction from pastry; if pasties, doubled together without walls, were the first pies, the derivation is easy from pie, a foot; as in some provinces, an apple pastry is still called an apple foot.]
1. Any crust baked with something in it.
No man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Mincing of meat in pies faveth the grinding of the teeth, and therefore more nourishing to them that have weak teeth. Bacon's Natural History.
He is the very Withers of the city; they have bought more editions of his works, than would serve to lay under all their pies at a lord mayor's Christmas. Dryden.
Chufe your materials right;
From thence of course the figure will arise,
And elegance adorn the surface of your pies. King.
Eat beef or pie-crust, if you'd serious be. King.
2. [Pica, Lat.] A magpie; a particoloured bird.
The pie will discharge thee for pulling the reft. Tusser.
The raven croak'd hoarse on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discords sung. Shakespeare.
Who taught the parrot human notes to try,
Or with a voice endu'd the chatt'ring pie?
'Twas witty want. Dryden.
3. The old popish service book, so called, as is supposed, from the different colour of the text and rubrick.
4. Cock and pie was a slight expression in Shakespeare's time, of which I know not the meaning.
Mr. Slender, come; we stay for you.—
—I'll eat nothing, I thank you, Sir.—
—By cock and pie, you shall not chuse, Sir; come, come. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
- PIEBALD. adj. [from pie.] Of various colours; diversified in colour.
It was a particoloured drefs,
Of patch'd and piebald languages. Hudibras.
They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet contentedly suffer their minds to appear abroad in a piebald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds. Locke.
They are pleased to hear of a piebald horse that is strayed out of a field near Ilfrington, as of a whole troop that has been engaged in any foreign adventure. Spectator, N^o 452.
Peel'd, patch'd, and piebald, linsley-woolsey brothers, Grave mummings! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

By Scotch invasion to be made a prey
To such pigwidgon myrmidons as they? Cleaveland.

PIL

PIKE. n. f. [picque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The lute or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: they are bred some by generation, and some not; as namely of a weed called pickerel-weed, unless Gefner be much mistaken; for he says, this weed and other glutinous matter, with the help of the sun's heat in some particular months, and in some ponds apted for it by nature, do become pikes: doubtless divers pikes are bred after this manner, or are brought into some ponds some other ways, that is past man's finding out: Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not.

In a pond into which were put several fish and two pikes, upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the pikes grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn.

2. [Pique, Fr.] A long lance used by the foot soldiers, to keep off the horse, to which bayonets have succeeded.

Beat you the drum that it speak mournfully,
Trail your steel pikes.
Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes;
for I speak this in hunger for bread, not for revenge. Shakespeare.
He wanted pikes to set before his archers. Shakespeare.
They clofed, and locked shoulder to shoulder, their pikes they strained in both hands and therewith their buckler in the left, the one end of the pike against the right foot, the other breast-high against the enemy. Hayward.

A lance he bore with iron pike;
Th' one half would thrust, the other strike. Hudibras.

3. A fork used in husbandry.

A rake for to rake up the fitches that lie,
A pike to pike them up handsome to drie. Tusser.

4. Among turners, two iron sprigs between, which any thing to be turned is fastened.

Hard wood, prepared for the lathe with rasping, they pitch between the pikes. Moxon.

PIKED. adj. [piqué, Fr.] Sharp; acuminate; ending in a point. In Shakespeare, it is used of a man with a pointed beard.

Why then I fuck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries. Shakespeare. King John.

PIKEMAN. n. f. [pique and man.] A soldier armed with a pike.

Three great squadrons of pikemen were placed against the enemy. Knolles's History of the Turks.

PIKESTAFF. n. f. [pique and staff.] The wooden frame of a pike.

To me it is as plain as a pikestaff, from what mixture it is, that this daughter silently lowers, t'other steals a kind look. Tatler, N° 75.

PILASTER. n. f. [pilastre, Fr. pilastro, Italian.] A square column sometimes insulated, but often set within a wall, and only shewing a fourth or a fifth part of its thickness. Diet.

Pilasters must not be too tall and slender, lest they resemble pillars; nor too dwarfish and gross, lest they imitate the piles or piers of bridges. Wotton.

Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set. Milton.

The curtain rises, and a new frontispiece is seen, joined to the great pilasters each side of the stage. Dryden.

Clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That laid with bits of rustic makes a front. Pope.

PILCHER. n. f. [Warburton says we should read pilche, which signifies a cloak or coat of skins, meaning the scabbard: this is confirmed by Junius, who renders pilly, a garment of skins; pylece, Sax. pellice, Fr. pellucia, Italian; pellis, Lat.]

1. A furred gown or case; any thing lined with fur. Hammer.

Pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears. Shakespeare.

2. A fish like a herring.

If the ground be hollow or weak, he strengthens it by driving in piles. Moxon.

The foundation of the church of Harlem is supported by wooden piles, as the houses in Amsterdam are. Locke.

2. A heap; an accumulation.

That is the way to lay the city flat,
And bury all which yet distinctly ranges
In heaps and piles of ruin. Shakespeare.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated

PIL

To his own portion! what expence by th' hour
Seems to flow from him! how i' th' name of thrift, Does he rake this together. Shakespeare.

By the water passing through the stone to its perpendicular intervals, was brought thither all the metallic matter now lodged therein, as well as that which lies only in an undigested and confused pile. Woodward.

3. Any thing heaped together to be burned.

1. A thief in literature; one who steals the thoughts or writings of another.
The ensuing discourse, lest I chance to be traduced for a plagiary by him who has played the thief, was one of those that, by a worthy hand, were stolen from me. South.
Without invention, a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others; both are allowed sometimes to copy and translate. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. The crime of literary theft. Not used.
Plagiarism had not its nativity with printing, but began when the paucity of books scarce wanted that invention. Brown.
PLAGUE. n. f. [plague, Dutch; plage, Teut. plaga, Latin;
πλῆγμα.]
1. Pestilence; a disease eminently contagious and destructive.
Thou art a bile,
A plague-sore or imbois'd carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. Shakesp. King Lear.
The general opinion is, that years hot and moist are most pestilential; yet many times there have been great plagues in dry years. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Snakes, that use within thy house for shade,
Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. May's Virgil's Georgicks.
19 T

PLA

All those plagues, which earth and air had brooded,
First on inferior creatures try'd their force,
And last they seiz'd on man. Lee and Dryden.

2. State of misery.
I am fet in my plague, and my heaviness is ever in my fight. Psalms xxxviii. 17.

3. Any thing troublesome or vexatious.
'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind. Sha.
I am not mad, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity. Shakespeare. K. John.
Good or bad company is the greatest blessing or greatest plague of life. L'Estrange.

Sometimes my plague, sometimes my darling. Prior.

TO PLAGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To infect with pestilence.
2. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress; to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate;
to make uneasy; to disturb.
If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a wretch's woe,
Then all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shak.
Thus were they plagu'd
And worn with famine. Milton.
People are formed out of their reason, plagu'd into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.
When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

PLA GUILY. adv. [from plagui.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.
This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so pla- guily under the lash, I dare not interrupt him. Dryden.
You look'd scornful, and snift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.

PLA GUY. adv. [from plague.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.
Of heats,
Add one more to the plaguy bill. Donne.
What perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron,
What plaguy mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with after-claps. Hudibras.

PLAICE. n. f. [plate, Dutch.] A flat fish.
Of flat fish there are soles, flounders, dabs and plaice. Carew.

PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the highlanders in Scotland: there is a particular kind worn too by the women; but both these modes seem now nearly extirpated among them; the one by act of parliament; and the other by adopting the English dresses of the sex.

PLAIN. adj. [planus, Latin.]
1. Smooth; level; flat; free from protuberances or excrescencies. In this sense, especially in philosophical writings, it is frequently written plane: as, a plane superficies.
It was his policy to leave no hold behind him; but to make all plain and waste. Spenser.
The South and South-East sides are rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst. Sandys's Journey.
Thy vineyard must employ thy sturdy steer
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain. Dryden.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chafe to travel through a plain one. Add.

2. Void of ornament; simple.
A crown of ruddy gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp, and rich without a show. Dryden.

3. Artless; not subtle; not specious; not learned; simple.
In choice of instruments, it is better to chuse men of a plain sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report. Bacon's Essays.
Of many plain, yet pious christians, this cannot be affirmed. Hammond's Fundamentals.
The experiments alledged with so much confidence, and told by an author that writ like a plain man, and one whose profession was to tell truth, helped me to resolve upon making the trial. Temple.
My heart was made to fit and pair within,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tendernefs. Rowe.
Our troops beat an army in plain fight and open field. Felt.
Must then at once, the character to fave,
The plain rough hero turn a crafty knave? Pope.

4. Honestly rough; open; sincere; not soft in language.
Give me leave to be plain with you, that yourself give no just cause of scandal. Bacon.

PLA

5. Mere; bare.
He that beguill'd you in a plain accent, was a plain knave, which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Some have at first for wits, then poets pass,
Turn'd critics next, and prov'd plain fools at last. Pope.

6. Evident; clear; discernible; not obscure.
They wonder'd there should appear any difficulty in any expressions, which to them seem'd very clear and plain. Clar.
Express thyself in plain, not doubtful words,
That ground for quarrels or disputes affords. Denham.
I can make the difference more plain, by giving you my method of proceeding in my translations; I considered the genius and distinguishing character of my author. Dryden.
'Tis plain in the history, that Elau was never subject to Jacob. Locke.
That children have such a right, is plain from the laws of God; that men are convinced, that children have such a right, is evident from the law of the land. Locke.
It is plain, that these discourses are calculated for none, but the fashionable part of womankind. Addison's Spectator.
To speak one thing mix'd dialects they join;
Divide the simple, and the plain define. Prior.

7. Not varied by much art.
A plain song plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.

PLAIN. adv.
1. Not obscurely.
2. Distinctly; articulately.
The string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.
Mar. vii. 35.

3. Simply; with rough sincerity.
Goodman Fact is allowed by every body to be a plain- spoken person, and a man of very few words; tropes and figures are his aversion. Addison's Court Tatler.

PLAIN. n. f. [plaine, Fr.] Level ground; open; flat; often, a field of battle.
In a plain in the land of Shinar they dwelt. Gen. xi. 2.
The Scots took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and march'd into the plain directly towards them. Hayward.
They erected their castles and habitations in the plains and open countries, where they found most fruitful lands, and turned the Irish into the woods and mountains. Davies.
Four forth Britannia's legions on the plain. Arbutnot.
While here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.
The impetuous courier pants in ev'ry vein,
And pining seems to beat the distant plain. Pope.

TO PLAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To level; to make even.
Upon one wing, the artillery was drawn, every piece having his guard of pioneers to plain the ways. Hayward.

TO PLAIN. v. n. [plaindre, je plains, Fr.] To lament; to wail.
Long since my voice is hoarse, and throat is sore,
With cries to skies, and curses to the ground;
But more I plain, I feel my woes the more. Sidney.
A plain song plain-singing voice requires
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
The fox, that first this cause of grief did find,
'Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind. Habberd.
The incessant weeping of my wife,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
Forc'd me to seek delays. Shakespeare.
He to himself thus plain'd. Milton.

PLAINDEALING. adj. [plain and deal.] Acting without art.
Though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man; it must not be denied, but I am a plaindealing villain. Shakespeare.
Bring a plaindealing innocence into a consistency with necessary prudence. L'Estrange.

PLAINDEALING. n. f. Management void of art.
I am no politician; and was ever thought to have too little wit, and too much plaindealing for a statesman. Denham.
It looks as fate with nature's law may strive
To shew plaindealing once an age would thrive. Dryden.

PLAINLY. adv. [from plain.]
1. Levelly; flatly.
2. Not subtilly; not speciously.
3. Without ornament.
4. Without gloss; sincerely.
You write to me with the freedom of a friend, setting down your thoughts as they occur, and dealing plainly with me in the matter. Pope.

5. In earnest; fairly.
They charged the enemies horse so gallantly, that they gave ground; and at last plainly run to a safe place. Clarendon.

6. Evidently; clearly; not obscurely.
St. Augustine acknowledgeth, that they are not only fet down, but also plainly set down in scripture; so that he which heareth or readeth, may without difficulty understand. Hooker.
Coriolanus neither cares whether they love or hate him;
and out of his carelessness, let's them plainly see it. Shakespeare.

PLA

By that feed
Is meant thy great deliverer, who shall bruise
The serpent's head; whereof to thee anon Plainlier shall be reveal'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
We see plainly that we have the means, and that nothing but the application of them is wanting. Addison.

PLAINNESS. n. f. [from plain.]
1. Levelness; flatness.
2. Want of ornament; want of show.
If some pride with want may be allowed,
We in our plainness may be justly proud.
Whate'er he's pleas'd to own, can need no show. Dryden.
As shades most sweetly recommend the light,
So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit. Pope.

3. Openness; rough sincerity.
Well, said Bassilius, I have not chosen Dametas for his fighting nor for his discouraging, but for his plainness and honesty, and therein I know he will not deceive me. Sidney.
Your plainness and your shortness please me well. Shakespeare.
Think't thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows; to plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Plainness and freedom, an epistolary file required. Watts.

4. Artlessness; simplicity.
All laugh to find
Unthinking plainness so o'er spreads thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths. Dryden's Juvenal.

PLAINTE. n. f. [plainte, French.]
1. Lamentation; complaint; lament.
Then pour out plainte, and in one word say this;
Helpless his plainte, who spoils himself of bliss. Sidney.
Bootsless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds. Shak.
From inward grief
His burning passion into plaints thus pour'd. Milton.

2. Exprobration of injury.
There are three just grounds of war with Spain; one of plaint, two upon defence. Bacon.

3. Expression of sorrow.
How many children's plaints, and mother's cries!
Where though I mourn my matchless loss alone,
And none between my weakness judge and me;
Yet even these gentle walls allow my moan,
Whose doleful echoes to my plaints agree. Wotton.
Lifting where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaints, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Par. Lost.
For her relief,
Vext with the long expressions of my grief,
Receive these plaints. Waller.

PLAINTEFUL. adj. [plaint and full.] Complaining; audibly sorrowful.
To what a sea of miseries my plaintful tongue doth lead me. Sidney, b. ii.

PLAINTEFF. n. f. [plaintiff, Fr.] He that commences a suit in law against another; opposed to the defendant.
The plaintiff proved the debt by three positive witnesses, and the defendant was cast in costs and damages. L'Estrange.
You and I shall talk in cold friendship at a bar before a judge, by way of plaintiff and defendant. Dryden.
In such a cause the plaintiff will be his'd,
My lord, the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd. Pope.

PLAINTEFF. adj. [plaintiff, Fr.] Complaining. A word not in use.
His younger son on the polluted ground,
First fruit of death, lies plaintiff of a wound
Giv'n by a brother's hand. Prior.

PLAINTIVE. adj. [plaintive, Fr.] Complaining; lamenting; expressive of sorrow.
His careful mother heard the plaintive found, Encompass'd with her sea-green sisters round. Dryden.
The goddess heard,
Rose like a morning mist, and thus begun
To soothe the sorrows of her plaintive son. Dryden.
Can nature's voice
Plaintive be drown'd, or lessen'd in the noise,
Though thouts as thunder loud afflict the air.
Leviathans in plaintive thunders cry. Prior.

PLAINWORK. n. f. [plain and work.] Needlework as distinguished from embroidery; the common practice of sewing or making linen garments.
She went to plainwork, and to purling brooks. Pope.

PLAIT. n. f. [corrupted from plait or ply, from ply or fold.]
A fold; a double.
Should the voice directly strike the brain,
It would astonish and confuse it much;
Therefore these plaits and folds the sound restrain,
That it the organ may more gently touch.
Nor shall thy lower garments artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Arm their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double ev'ry charm they seek to hide. Prior.

PLA

'Tis very difficult to trace out the figure of a vest through all the plaits and foldings of the drapery. Addison.

TO PLAIT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fold; to double.
The busy sylphs surround their darling care,
Some fold the sleeve, while others plait the gown;
And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own. Pope.
Will she on Sunday morn thy neckcloth plait. Gay.

2. To weave; to braid.
Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair.
Peter iii. 3.
What the demands, incessant I'll prepare;
I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair;
My busy diligence shall deck her board,
For there at least I may approach my lord. Prior.

3. To intangle; to involve.
Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
Who covers faults at last with shame descends. Shakespeare.

PLAITER. n. f. [from plait.] He that plaits.

PLAN. n. f. [plan, French.]
1. A scheme; a form; a model.
Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights,
The generous plan of power delivered down
From age to age to your renown'd forefathers. Addison.

2. A plot of any building or ichnography; form of any thing laid down on paper.
Artists and plans reliev'd my solemn hours;
I founded palaces, and planted bow'rs. Prior.

TO PLAN. v. a. [from the noun.] To scheme; to form in design.
Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate,
And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.
PLANARY. adj. Pertaining to a plane. Diſ.

PLANCHED. adj. [from planche.] Made of boards.
He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,
Whose Western side is with a vineyard backt,
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key. Shakespeare.

PLANCHER. n. f. [plancher, French.] A board; a plank.
Oak, cedar and chefnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards and decks, as walnuts. Bacon's Nat. History.

PLANCHING. n. f. In carpentry, the laying the floors in a building. Diſ.

PLANE. n. f. [planus, Latin.] Plane is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]
1. A level surface.
Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptick in all kinds of angles. Bent.
Projectiles would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the plane, on which they move, stop their motion. Cheyne.

2. [Plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.
The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TO PLANE. v. a. [planer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To level; to smooth from inequalities.
The foundation of the Roman caufeway was made of rough stone, joined with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To smooth with a plane.
These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

PLANE-TREE. n. f. [platanus, Lat. plane, platanus, Fr.]
The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.
The beech, the swimming alder and the plane. Dryd.

PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανητης; planetes, Fr.]
Planets are the erratic or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another:
we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since the moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes:
we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four

PLA

four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent. Shakefp.

And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

PLANETARY. adj. [planétaire, Fr. from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.
Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton.
To marble and to brass, such features give,
Describe the stars and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Granvill.
2. Under the denomination of any particular planet.
Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,
That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd. Dryden.
I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think,
I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way facetious. Addison's Spectator, N^o 487.
3. Produced by the planets.
Here's gold, go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vied city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakespeare's King Lear.
4. Having the nature of a planet; erratick.
We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move;
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackm.
Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetary. Brown.

PLANE TETRUCK. adj. [planet and strike.] Blasted; sicere afflatus.

Wonder not much if thus amaz'd I look,
Since I saw you, I have been planet-struck;
A beauty, and so rare, I did desire. Suckling.

PLANIFOLIOUS. adj. [planus and folium, Lat.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the center, whose face is usually uneven, rough and jagged. Diels.

PLANIMETRICAL. adj. [from planimetry.] Pertaining to the measurement of plane surfaces.

PLANIMETRY. n. f. [planus, Lat. and μέτρον; planimetrie,
Fr.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPETALOUS. adj. [planus, Lat. and πέταλον.] Flatleaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upwards, as in dandelion and fucory. Diels.

TO PLANISH. v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smoothe. A word used by manufacturers.

PLANISPHERE. n. f. [planus, Lat. and sphaera.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

PLANK. n. f. [planche, Fr.] A thick strong board.

They gazed on their ships, seeing them so great, and consisting of divers planks. Abbot's Description of the World.

The doors of plank were; their clove exquisite,
Kept with a double key. Chapman's Odyssey.

The smoothed plank new rub'd with balm. Milton.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches. Wilkins.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

Be warn'd to shun the watry way,
For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,
And empty tombs erected on the banks. Dryden.

TO PLANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover or lay with planks.

If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed salt-petre. Bacon's Natural History.

A feed of monstrous height appear'd;
The sides were plank'd with pine. Dryden.

PLANCONICAL. adj. [planus and conus.] Level on one side and conical on others.

Some few are planoconvex, whose superficies is in part level between both ends. Grew's Museum.

PLANOCONVEX. n. f. [planus and convexus.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planoconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton's Opticks.

PLANT. n. f. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

PLA

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be dis-cernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petals, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappus, or winged with down, but emit no milk.
6. The herbæ capitatae, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jaggs. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no down adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11.
The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella; [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tubercle root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petals; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticillate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polypermae plantæ femine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any feed pod.
16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multi-filiquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cafes or filiquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar feed-cate containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong filiquous cafes. 20.
Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulses, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar cafe containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth:
the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no foot stalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is hexapetalous.
24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form:
these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or stami-nate flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely crop. Shakefp.

Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense; wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed. Grew's Cynol.

It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants. Locke.

Once

PLA

Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And ev'ry plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.

A sapling.
A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks. Shakefp. As You like it.

Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a stubborn stroke. Dryden.

[Planta, Lat.] The sole of the foot. Answorth.

TO PLANT. v. a. [planto, Lat. planter, Fr.]

1. To put into the ground in order to grow; to set; to cultivate.
Plant not thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord. Deutr. xvi. 21.
2. To procreate; to generate.
The honour'd gods the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men, plant love amongst you. Shak.
It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Than feed it with such overroasted flesh. Shakefp.
3. To place; to fix.
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
In this hour,
I will advise you where to plant yourselves. Shakefp.

plantal germinations. Glanville's Sceps.

PLANTATION. n. f. [plantatio, from planto, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of planting.
2. The place planted.
As wine are to gardens and orderly plantations, so are tumults to parliaments. King Charles.

Some peasants
Of the same soil their nursery prepare,
With that of their plantation; left the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.
Whole rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town. Pope.
Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Calliope in the midst of a plantation of laurel. Addison.

A colony.
Planting of countries is like planting of woods; the principal thing, that hath been the destruction of most plantations, hath been the bafe and hasty drawing of profit in the first years; speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the plantation. Bacon's Essays.

Introduction; establishment.
Episcopacy must be cast out of this church, after possession here, from the first plantation of christianity in this island. King Charles.

PLANTED. adj. [from plant.] This word seems in Shakespeare

Pliant and warm may still her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again.

3. Easily complying.
In languages the tongue is more pliant to all sounds, the joints more supple to all feats of activity, in youth than afterwards.

Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practise ev'ry pliant gesture,
Op'ning their trunk for ev'ry tester.

4. Easily persuaded.
The will was then ductile and pliant to right reason, it met the dictates of a clarified understanding halfway.

PLIANTNESS. n. f. [from pliant.] Flexibility; toughness.
Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness.

PLIATURE. n. f. [pliatúra, from plio, Lat.] Fold; double.
PLICATION. }
1. Plication is used somewhere in Clarissa.
PLIERS. n. f. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

PLO

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers.
TO PLIGHT. v. a. [plichten, Dutch.]
1. To pledge; to give as surety.

He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land.

Met the night mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.
I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight.

New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about us.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plio, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, plight or plait, a fold or flexure.]
Her head she fondly would aguilie
With gaudie girlonds, or fresh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' th' plighted clouds.

PLIGHT. n. f. [This word skinner imagines to be derived from the Dutch, plicht, office or employment; but Junius observes, that plicht, Saxon, signifies dittois or preling danger; whence, I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]
1. Condition; state.

When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful fight Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are.

Befeech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood Praying.
Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight.

Molt perfect hero tried in heaviest plight
Of labours huge and hard.

2. Good case.
Who abuseth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gain is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

4. [From plight.] A fold; a pucker; a double; a purtle; a plait.
Yclad, for fear of seorching air,
All in a silken camus, lilly white,
Purled upon with many a folded plight.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλινθίς.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vitruvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plat-band.

TO PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dutch. Skinner.]
1. To toil; to mull; to dudge; to travel.

A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his staff before him.

Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in grois,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss.

2. To travel laboriously.
Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter, pack.
If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day.

Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With faintest vow my faults to have amended.

PLO

3. To study closely and dully.
Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long-during action tires
The finewy vigour of the traveller.
He plods to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute.
She reason'd without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong.
PLOTTER. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.
Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with faucey looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from other's books?
PLOT, n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]
1. A small extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest.
Plant ye with alders or willowes a plot,
Where yeerely as needeth moe poles may be got.
Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy.
Were there but this fingle plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind.
When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in gardens plots under the negligent hand of a gardener.
2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddess inhabits this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it to perfect a plot.
3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage.
4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.
I have overheard a plot of death upon him.
Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress.
5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved and embarrassed;
the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.
If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before.
Nothing must be fung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot.
Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not?
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical.
6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.
Frustrate all our plots and wiles.
7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.
Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The farce of his negotiation.
To PLOT, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.
The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me.
The wicked plotteth against the just.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce
Thee from obedience.
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold.
2. To contrive; to scheme.
The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis an-swer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain.
To PLOT, v. a.
1. To plan; to contrive.

PLO

- With shame and sorrow fill'd;
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime.
2. To describe according to ichnography.
This treatise plotteth down Cornwall, as it now standeth, for the particulars.
PLOTTER, n. f. [from plot.]
1. Conspirator.
As for you, Colonel, we shall try who's the greater plotter of us two; I against the state, or you against the petticoat.
2. Contriver.
An irreligious moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.
PLOTTER, n. f. [plottier, Fr. pluvialis, Lat.] A lapwing. A bird.
Of wild birds, Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant and plotter.
The bittern knows his time: or from the shore,
The plotters when to scatter o'er the heath
And sing.
PLOUGH, n. f. [plog, Saxon; plog, Danish; plogh, Dutch.]
1. The instrument with which the furrows are cut in the ground to receive the seed.
Look how the purple flower, which the plogh
Hath torn in sunder, languishing doth die.
Some ploghs differ in the length and shape of their beams;
some in the share, others in the coulter and handles.
In ancient times the sacred plogh employ'd
The kings and awful fathers.
2. A kind of plane.
To PLOUGH, v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.
Rebellion, insolence, sedition
We ourselves have plogh'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us.
Doth the ploughman plogh all day to sow?
They only give the land one ploghing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black.
To PLOUGH, v. a.
1. To turn up with the plough.
Let the Volcians
Plough Rome and harrow Italy.
Shou'd any slave, to lewd, belong to you?
No doubt you'd send the rogue, in letters bound,
To work in bridewell, or to plogh your ground.
A man may plogh, in stiff grounds the first time fallow'd, an acre a day.
You find it plogh'd into ridges and furrows.
2. To bring to view by the plough.
Another of a dusky colour, near black; there are of these frequently plogh'd up in the fields of Weldon.
3. To furrow; to divide.
When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
He plogh'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd.
With speed we plogh the watry way,
My power shall guard thee.
4. To tear; to furrow.
Let
Patient Octavia plogh thy visage up
With her prepared nails.
PLOUGHBOY, n. f. [plogh and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.
A ploghboy, that has never seen any thing but thatched houses and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house.
PLOUGHMAN, n. f. [from plogh.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.
When the country shall be replenish'd with corn, as it will, if well followed; for the country people themselves are great ploghers and small spenders of corn: then there should be good store of magazines erected.
PLOUGHMAN, n. f. [plogh and land.] A farm for corn.
Who hath a ploghland casts all his seed-corn there,
And yet allows his ground more corn should bear.
In this book are entered the names of the manors or inhabited townships, the number of ploghlands that each contains, and the number of the inhabitants.
PLOUGHMAN, n. f. [plogh and man.]
1. One that attends or uses the plough.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploghmen's clocks,
The cuckoo then on ev'ry tree, God provides the good things of the world, to serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploghman.
The careful ploghman doubting stands.
Your reign no less assures the ploghman's peace;
Than the warm sun advances his increase.
The merchant gains by peace, and the soldiers by war, the shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploghmen by dry.
Who

PLU

- Who can cease to admire
The ploughman conful in his coarse attire.
One
My ploughman's is, t'other my shepherd's son.
2. A gross ignorant rustic.
Her hand! to whose soft seizure
The cigner's down is harsh, and, spite of sense,
Hard as the palm of ploughman.
3. A strong laborious man.
A weak stomach will turn rye bread into vinegar, and a ploughman will digest it.
PLOUGHMONDAY, n. f. The monday after twelfth-day.
PloUGHmonday next after that the twelfside is past,
Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last.
PLOUGHSHARE, n. f. [plogh and share.] The part of the plough that is perpendicular to the coulter.
As the earth was turned up, the ploghshare lighted upon a great stone; we pulled that up, and so found some pretty things.
The pretty innocent walks blindfold among burning plogh- shares without being scorched.
To PLUCK, v. a. [pluccian, Sax. plucken, Dutch.]
1. To pull with nimbleness or force; to snatch; to pull; to draw; to force on or off; to force up or down; to act upon with violence. It is very generally and licentiously used, particularly by Shakespeare.
It seem'd better unto that noble king to plant a peaceable government among them, than by violent means to pluck them under.
You were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,
For now a time is come to mock at form.
Canst thou not
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom?
When yet he was but tender bodied, when youth with comelines plucked all gaze his way.
I gave my love a ring;
He would not pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world matters.
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head.
Dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks.
I will pluck them up by the roots out of my land.
Pluck away his crop with his feathers.
A time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted.
They pluck off their skin from off them.
Dispatch 'em quick, but first pluck out their tongues,
Left with their dying breath they sow sedition.
Beneath this shade the weary peasant lies,
Plucks the broad leaf, and bids the breezes rise.
From the back
Of herds and flocks, a thousand tugging bills
Pluck hair and wool.
2. To strip of feathers.
Since I plucked geese, I knew not what it was to be beaten.
I come to thee from plume pluck'd Richard.
3. To pluck up a heart or spirit. A proverbial expression for taking up or refusing of courage.
He willed them to pluck up their hearts, and make all things ready for a new assault, wherein he expected they should with courageous resolution recompense their late cowardice.
Pluck, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pull; a draw; a single act of plucking.
Birds kept coming and going all the day long; but so few at a time, that the man did not think them worth a pluck.
Were the ends of the bones dry, they could not, without great difficulty, obey the plucks and attractions of the motory muscles.
2. [Pluck, Erse. I know not whether derived from the English, rather than the English from the Erse.] The heart, liver and lights of an animal.
PLUCKER, n. f. [from pluck.] One that plucks.
Thou setter up and *pluck*er down of kings!
Pull it as soon as you see the seed begin to grow brown, at which time let the pluckers tie it up in handfuls.
PLUG, n. f. [plugg, Swedish; plugg, Dutch.] A stopple; any thing driven hard into another body.
Shutting the valve with the plug, draw down the sucker to the bottom.
The fighting with a man's own shadow, consists in the brandishing of two sticks grasped in each hand, and loaden with plugs of lead at either end: this opens the chest.
In bottling wine, fill your mouth full of corks, together with a large plug of tobacco.

PLU

- To PLUG, v. a. [from the noun.] To stop with a plug.
A tent plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it.
PLUM, n. f. [plum, plumpeop, Sax. blomme, Danish. A custom has prevailed of writing plumb, but improperly.]
1. A fruit.
The flower consists of five leaves, which are placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oval or globular fruit, having a soft fleshy pulp, surrounding an hard oblong stone, for the most part pointed; to which should be added, the footstalks are long and slender, and have but a single fruit upon each: the species are; 1. The jean-hative, or white primordian. 2. The early black damask, commonly called the Morocco plum. 3. The little black damask plum. 4. The great damask violet of Tours. 5.

Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove.
PLUMB, n. f. [plumb, Fr. plumbum, Lat.] A plummet; a leaden weight let down at the end of a line.
If the plumb line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level.
PLUMB, adv. [from the noun.] Perpendicularly to the horizon.
If all these atoms should descend plumb down with equal velocity, being all perfectly solid and imporous, and the vacuum not resisting their motion, they would never the one overtake the other.
Is it not a sad thing to fall thus plumb into the grave? well one minute and dead the next.
To PLUMB, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To sound; to search by a line with a weight at its end.
The most experienced seamen plumbed the depth of the

He cram'd them till their guts did ache
With caudle, custard and plumcake.
PLUME, n. f. [plume, Fr. pluma, Lat.]
1. Feather of birds.
Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail;
We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train.
Wings he wore of many a colour'd plume.
They appear made up of little bladders, like those in the plume or stalk of a quill.
2. Feather worn as an ornament.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts,
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes
Fan you into despair.

PLU

Eastern travellers know that ostridges feathers are common, and the ordinary plume of Janizaries. Brown.
 The fearful infant
 Daunted to see a face with steel o'erspread,
 And his high plume that nodded o'er his head. Dryden.
 3. Pride; towering mien.
 Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
 From plume pluckt Richard, who with willing soul Adopts thee heir. Shakespeare's Richard II.
 4. Token of honour; prize of contest.
 Ambitious to win from me some plume. Milton.
 5. Plume is a term used by botanists for that part of the seed of a plant, which in its growth becomes the trunk: it is inclosed in two small cavities, formed in the lobes for its reception, and is divided at its loose end into divers pieces, all closely bound together like a bunch of feathers, whence it has this name.
 To PLUME. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To pick and adjust feathers.
 Swans must be kept in some enclosed pond, where they may have room to come ashore and plume themselves. Mort.
 2. [Plumer, Fr.] To strip of feathers.

 PLUMMET. n. f. [from plumb.]
 1. A weight of lead hung at a string, by which depths are sounded, and perpendicularity is discerned.
 Deeper than did ever plummet sound,
 I'll drown my book. Shakespeare, Tempest.
 Fly envious time
 Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,
 Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton.
 2. Any weight.
 God sees the body of flesh which you bear about you, and the plummet which it hangs upon your soul, and therefore, when you cannot rise high enough to him, he comes down to you.
 The heaviness of these bodies, being always in the ascending side of the wheel, must be counterpoised by a plummet fattened about the pulley on the axis: this plummet will descend according as the hand doth make the several parts of the wheel lighter or heavier. Wilkins.
 PLUMOSITY. n. f. [from plumous.] The state of having feathers.
 PLUMOUS. adj. [plumous, Fr. plumifus, Lat.] Feathery; resembling feathers.
 This has a like plumous body in the middle, but finer. Woodward on Fossils.
 PLUMP. adj. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Skinner derives it from pemelle, Fr. full like a ripe apple; it might be more easily deduced from plum, which yet seems very harsh. Junius omits it.] Somewhat fat; not lean; sleek; full and smooth.
 The heifer, that valued itself upon a smooth coat and a plump habit of body, was taken up for a sacrifice; but the ox, that was despised for his raw bones, went on with his work still. L'Estrange.
Plump gentleman,
 Get out as fast as e'er you can;
 Or cease to puff, or to exclaim,
 You make the very proud you blame. Prior.

Latria to be given to the cross, yet that it is pointblank against the definition of the council of Nice.

23. Point de vue; exact or exactly in the point of view.
Every thing about you should demonstrate a careless defolation; but you are rather point de vue in your accoutrements, as loving yourself, than the lover of another.

I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance,
I will be point de vue the very man.

Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight or point de vue, but free for exercise.

To POINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to forge or grind to a point.
The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain; now that fear is sharpened and pointed, by the Spaniards late enterprizes upon the Palatinate.

Part-new grind the blunted ax, and point the dart.

What help will all my heavy friends afford,
When to my breast I lift the pointed sword.

The two pinnæ stand upon either side, like the wings in the petasus of a Mercury, but rise much higher, and are more pointed.

Some on pointed wood

Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food.

2. To direct towards an object, by way of forcing it on the notice.

Alas to make me
A fixed figure, for the hand of scorn
To point his slow unmeaning finger at.

Mount Hermon, yonder sea, each place behold
As I point.

3. To direct the eye or notice.
Whoever should be guided through his battles by Minerva, and pointed to every scene of them, would see nothing but subjects of surprize.

4. To show as by directing the finger.
From the great sea, you shall point out for you mount Hor.

It will become us, as rational creatures, to follow the direction of nature, where it seems to point us out the way.

I shall do justice to those who have distinguished themselves in learning, and point out their beauties.

By nature pointed out for preference?

5. [Pointer, Fr.] To direct towards a place: as, the cannon were pointed against the fort.

6. To distinguish by stops or points.
To POINT. v. n.

1. To note with the finger; to force upon the notice, by directing the finger towards it. With at commonly, sometimes to before the thing indigited.

Now must the world point at poor Catharine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife.

Sometimes we use one finger only, as in pointing at any thing.

Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

2. To distinguish words or sentences by points.
Rouse up for flame! our brothers of Pharfalla
Point at their wounds, and cry aloud to battle.

3. To indicate as dogs do to sportmen.
Fond the Jews are of their method of pointing.

The subtle dog scowls with sagacious nose,
Now the warm scent assures the covey near,
He treads with caution, and he points with fear.

4. To show.
To point at what time the balance of power was most equally held between their lords and commons in Rome, would perhaps admit a controversy.

POINTED. adj. or participle. [from point.]

1. Sharp; having a sharp point or pic.
Who now reads Cowley? if he pleases, yet
His moral pleases, not his pointed wit;

His moral pleases, not his pointed wit;
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind.

2. Epigrammatical; abounding in conceits.
POINTEDLY. adv. [from pointed.] In a pointed manner.

The copiousness of his wit was such, that he often writ too pointedly for his subject.

POINTEDNESS. n. f. [from pointed.]

1. Sharpness; pickiness with asperity.
The vicious language is vast and gaping, swelling and irregular; when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain and pointedness.

POI

2. Epigrammatical smartness.
Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men; and in this excel him, that you add pointedness of thought.

POINTEL. n. f. Any thing on a point.
These pointes or pointels are, for the most part, little balls, set at the top of a slender stalk, which they can move every way at pleasure.

POINTER. n. f. [from point.]
1. Any thing that points.
I ought to tell him what are the wheels, springs, pointer, hammer and bell whereby a clock gives notice of the time.

2. A dog that points out the game to sportmen.
The well taught pointer leads the way,
The scent grows warm; he stops, he springs his prey.

POINTINGSTOCK. n. f. [pointing and stock.] Something made the object of ridicule.

I, his forlorn dutchess,
Was made a wonder and a pointingstock
To every idle rascal follower.

POINTESS. adj. [from point.] Blunt; not sharp; obtuse.
Lay that pointless clergy-weapon by,
And to the laws, your sword of justice, fly.

POISON. n. f. [poison, Fr.] That which destroys or injures life by a small quantity, and by means not obvious to the senses; venom.

The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.
Themselves were first to do the ill,
E'er they thereof the knowledge could attain;
Like him that knew not poison's power to kill,
Until, by tasting it, himself was slain.

One gives another a cup of poison, but at the same time tells him it is a cordial, and so he drinks it off and dies.

To POISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To infect with poison.
Envy is a lawless enemy, against whom poisoned arrows may be used.

2. To attack, injure or kill by poison given.
He was so discouraged, that he poisoned himself and died.

3. To corrupt; to taint.
Drink with Walters, or with Chartres eat;
They'll never poison you, they'll only cheat.

The other messenger,
Whose welcome I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine.

With thy false arts poison'd his people's loyalty?

POISON-TREE. n. f. [Toxicodendron.] A plant. The flower consists of five leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a roundish, dry, and for the most part a furrowed fruit, in which is contained one compressed seed.

POISONER. n. f. [from poison.]

1. One who poisons.
I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes.

2. A corrupter.
Wretches who live upon other men's sins, the common poisoners of youth, getting their very bread by the damnation of souls.

POISONOUS. adj. [from poison.] Venomous; having the qualities of poison.

Those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous,
Where the disease is violent.

Not firus shoots a fiercer flame,
When with his poisonous breath he blasts the sky.

A lake, that has no fresh water running into it, will, by heat and its stagnation, turn into a stinking rotten puddle, sending forth noxious and poisonous steams.

POISONOUSLY. adv. [from poisonous.] Venomously.
Men more easily pardon ill things done, than ill things said; such a peculiar rancour and venom do they leave behind in men's minds, and so much more poisonously and inecu-rably does the serpent bite with his tongue than his teeth.

POISONOUSNESS. n. f. [from poisonous.] The quality of being poisonous; venomousness.

POITREL. n. f. [Poitrel, pairrine, Fr. pettorale, Italian; pettorale, Lat.]

1. Armour for the breast of a horse.
2. A graving tool.

POIZE. n. f. [poiz, French.]

1. Weight; force of any thing tending to the center.
He fell, as an huge rockie cliff,
Whose false foundation, waves have wash'd away
With dreadful poize, is from the main land reft.

When I have suit,
It shall be full of poize and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted.

2. Balance;

POL

2. Balance; equipoize; equilibrium.
To do't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poize of sin and charity.

Where an equal poize of hope and fear Does arbitrate th' event, my nature is That I incline to hope.

The particles that formed the earth, must convene from all quarters towards the middle, which would make the whole compound to rest in a poize.

'Tis odd to see fluctuation in opinion so earnestly charged upon Luther, by such as have lived half their days in a poize between two churches.

3. A regulating power.
Men of an unbounded imagination often want the poize of judgment.

To POIZE. v. a. [pozer, French.]

1. To balance; to hold or place in equiponderance.
How nice to couch? how all her speeches poized be:
A nymph thus turn'd, but mended in translation.

Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,
Levy'd to ride with warring winds, and poize
Their lighter wings.

Nor yet was earth suspended in the sky,
Nor poize'd did on her own foundation lie.

Our nation with united int'rest blest,
Nor now content to poize, shall I way the rest.

Where could they find another form'd to fit,
To poize with solid sense a sprightly wit!

That poiz'd, impels and rules the steady whole.

2. To be equiponderant to.
If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poize another of sensuality, the balancings of our natures would conduct us to preposterous conclusions.

3. To weigh.
We poizing us in her defective scale
Shall weigh thee to the beam.

He cannot sincerely confider the strength, poize the weight and discern the evidence of the clearest arguments, where they would conclude against his desires.

4. To oppress with weight.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap,
Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory.

POKE. n. f. [pocca, Sax. peche, Fr.] A pocket; a small bag.

I will not buy a pig in a poke.
She suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother.

My correspondent writes against master's gowns and poke sleeves.

To POKE. v. a. [poka, Swedish.] To feel in the dark; to search any thing with a long instrument.

If these presumed eyes be clipped off, they will make use of their protrusions or horns, and poke out their way as before.

POKER. n. f. [from poke.] The iron bar with which men stir the fire.

With poker fiery red Crack the stones, and melt the lead.

If the poker be out of the way, stir the fire with the tongs.

POLAR. adj. [polaire, Fr. from pole.] Found near the pole;
lying near the pole; issuing from the pole.

As when two polar winds, blowing adverse Upon the Cronian sea, together drive Mountains of ice.

I doubt
If any suffer on the polar coast,
The rage of Arctos, and eternal frost.

POLARITY. n. f. [from polar.] Tendency to the pole.
This polarity from refrigeration, upon extremity and defect of a loadstone, might touch a needle any where.

POLARY. adj. [polaris, Lat.] Tending to the pole; having a direction toward the poles.

Irons, heated red hot, and cooled in the meridian from North to South, contract a polar power.

POLE. n. f. [polus, Lat. pole, Fr.]

1. The extremity of the axis of the earth; either of the points on which the world turns.

From the centre thrice to the utmost pole.

From pole to pole
The fork lightning flashes, the roaring thunders roll.

2. [Pole, Sax. pala, pau, Fr. pala, Italian, and Spanish; palus, Lat.] A long staff.

A long pole, struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water, maketh a found.

If after some distinguish'd leap,
He drops his pole, and seems to slip;

POL

Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher.

He ordered to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling which held the mainyard to the mast, then rowing the ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board.

3. A tall piece of timber erected.
Wither'd is the garland of the war,
The foldier's pole is fall'n.

Live to be the show and gaze o' th' time,
We'll have thee as our rarer monst'ers are Painted upon a pole, and underwit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

4. A measure of length containing five yards and a half.
This ordinance of tithing them by the pole is not only fit for the gentlemen, but also the noblemen.

Every pole square of mud, twelve inches deep, is worth six pence a pole to fling out.

5. An instrument of measuring.
A peer of the realm and a counsellor of state are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace.

To POLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with poles.
Begin not to pole your hops.

POLEAXE. n. f. [pole and axe.] An axe fixed to a long pole.
To beat religion into the brains with a poleaxe, is to offer victims of human blood.

One hung a poleaxe at his saddle bow,
And one a heavy mace to flun the foe.

POLICAT. n. f. [Pole or Polish cat, because they abound in Poland.] The fitchew; a stinking animal.

Polecats? there are fairer things than polecats.
Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you polecat! out, out, out; I'll conjure you.

She, at a pin in the wall, hung like a polecat in a warren, to amuse them.

How should he, harmless youth,
Who kill'd but polecats, learn to murder men.

POLEDAVIES. n. f. A sort of coarse cloth.

POLEMICAL. } adj. [πολεμικός.] Controversial; disputative.

I have had but little respite from these polemical exercises, and, notwithstanding all the rage and malice of the adversaries of our church, I sit down contented.

The nullity of this distinction has been solidly shewn by most of our polemical writers of the protestant church.

The best method to be used with these polemical ladies, is to shew them the ridiculous side of their cause.

POLEMICK. n. f. Disputant; controversialist.
Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Came whip and spur.

POLEMOSCOPE. n. f. [πολεμικός and σκοπία.] In optics, is a kind of crooked or oblique perspective glass, contrived for seeing objects that do not lie directly before the eye.

POLSTAR. n. f. [pole and star.]

1. A star near the pole, by which navigators compute their northern latitude; cynosure; lodestar.

If a pilot at sea cannot see the polstar, let him steer his course by such stars as best appear to him.

I was failing in a vast ocean without other help than the polstar of the ancients.

2. Any guide or director.

POLY-MOUNTAIN. n. f. [polium, Lat.] A plant.
The poly-mountain hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose stamina supply the place of a crest; the beard is divided into five segments as the germander; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds shut up in the flower cup: the flowers are collected into an head upon the top of the stalks and branches.

POLICE. n. f. [French.] The regulation and government of a city or country, so far as regards the inhabitants.

POLICED. adj. [from police.] Regulated; formed into a regular course of administration.

Where there is a kingdom altogether unable or indignto govern, it is a just cause of war for another nation, that is civil or policed, to subdue them.

POLICY. n. f. [πολιτικά; politia, Lat.]

1. The art of government, chiefly with respect to foreign powers.

2. Art; prudence; management of affairs; stratagem.
The policy of that purpose is made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which for your best ends
You call your policy; how is't less or worse,
But it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war.

If she be curst, it is for policy,
For she's not froward, but modest.

The best rule of policy, is to prefer the doing of justice before all enjoyments.

POL

The wisdom of this world is sometimes taken in scripture for policy, and consists in a certain dexterity of managing business for a man's secular advantage. South's Sermons.

3. [Polisa, Spanish.] A warrant for money in the public funds.

To POLISH. v. a. [polir, Lat. polir, Fr.]

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life, inventors rare. Milton.

Bid soft science polish Britain's heroes. Irene.

To POLISH. v. n. To answer to the act of polishing; to receive a gloss.

It is reported by the ancients, that there was a kind of steel, which would polish almost as white and bright as silver. Bacon.

POLISH. n. f. [poli, politure, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Artificial gloss; brightness given by attrition.

Not to mention what a huge column of granite cost in the quarry, only consider the great difficulty of heaving it into any form, and of giving it the due turn, proportion and polish.

Another prism of clearer glass and better polish seemed free from veins. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Another prism of clearer glass and better polish seemed free from veins. Newton's Opticks.

2. Elegance of manners.

What are these wondrous civilizing arts,

This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour,

That render man thus tractable and tame? Addison's Cato.

POLISHABLE. adj. [from polish.] Capable of being polished.

POLISHER. n. f. [from polish.] The person or instrument that gives a gloss.

I consider an human soul without education, like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its inherent beauties, till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addison.

POLITE. adj. [politus, Latin.]

1. Glossy; smooth.

Some of them are diaphanous, shining and polite; others not polite, but as if powder'd over with fine iron dust. Woodw.

If any fort of rays, falling on the polite surface of any pellucid medium, be reflected back, the fits of easy reflexion, which they have at the point of reflexion, shall still continue to return. Newton's Opticks.

The edges of the sand holes, being worn away, there are left all over the glass a numberless company of very little convex polite rifings like waves. Newton's Opticks.

POLITICIAN. n. f. [politicien, Fr.]

1. One versed in the arts of government; one skilled in politics.

Get thee glass eyes,

And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see things thou dost not. Shakespeare. King Lear.

And 't be any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician. Shakespeare.

Although I may seem less a politician to men, yet I need no secret distinctions nor evasions before God. King Charles.

While empirick politicians use deceit,

Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat,

You boldly show that skill, which they pretend,

And work by means as noble as your end. Dryden.

Coffee, which makes the politician wise,

And see through all things with his half-shut eyes,

Sent up in vapours to the baron's brain

New stratagems, the radiant lock to gain. Pope.

2. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,

Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,

Appointed to await me thirty fates. Milton.

POL

If a man succeeds in any attempt, though undertook with never so much rashness, his success shall vouch him a politician, and good luck shall pass for deep contrivance; for give any one fortune, and he shall be thought a wife man. South.

POLITICK. adj. [πολιτικός.]

1. Political; civil. In this sense political is almost always used, except in the phrase body politick.

Virtuously and wisely acknowledging, that he with his people made all but one politick body, whereof himself was the head; even so cared for them as he would for his own limbs. Sidney, l. ii.

No civil or politick constitutions have been more celebrated than his by the best authors. Temple.

2. Prudent; versed in affairs.

This land was famously enrich'd

With politick grave counsel; then the king

Had virtuous uncles. Shakespeare. Richard III.

3. Artful; cunning. In this sense political is not used.

I have trod a measure; I have flatter'd a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy. Shakespeare.

Authority followeth old men, and favour youth; but for the moral part, perhaps youth will have the preeminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon.

No less alike the politick and wife,

All fly slow things, with circumspect eyes;

Men in their loose unguarded hours they take. Pope.

POLITICKLY. adv. [from politick.] Artfully; cunningly.

Thus have I politickly begun my reign,

And 'tis my hope to end successfully. Shakespeare.

'Tis politickly done,

To send me packing with an host of men. Shakespeare.

She woos the gentle air,

To hide her guilty front with innocent snow,

And on her naked shame,

Pollute with sinful blame, Milton.

3. To corrupt by mixtures of ill.

Envy you my praise, and would destroy

With grief my pleasures, and pollute my joy? Dryden.

4. Milton uses this word in an uncommon construction.

Polluted from the end of his creation. Milton.

POLLUTEDNESS. n. f. [from pollute.] Defilement; the state of being polluted.

POLLUTER. n. f. [from pollute.] Defiler; corrupter.

Ev'n he, the king of men,

Fell at his threshold, and the spoil of Troy

The foul polluters of his bed enjoy. Dryden's Ennis.

POLLUTION. n. f. [pollutio, Fr. pollutio, Latin.]

1. The act of defiling.

The contrary to consecration is pollution, which happens in churches by homicide, and burying an excommunicated person in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The state of being defiled; defilement.

Their strife pollution brings

Upon the temple. Milton's Par. Lost, l. xii.

POLLTRON. n. f. [pollice truncato, from the thumb cut off; it being once a practice of cowards to cut off their thumbs, that they might not be compelled to serve in war. Saunders.

Menage derives it from the Italian poltra, a bed; as cowards feign themselves sick a bed; others derive it from poltra or poltra, a young unbroken horse.] A coward; a midgit; a scoundrel.

Patience is for polltrons.

They that are bruised with wood or fists,

And think one beating may for once

Suffice, are cowards and polltrons. Hudibras, p. ii.

For who but a polltron posses'd with fear,

Such haughty insolence can tamely bear. Dryden.

POLY. n. f. [poliam, Lat.] An herb.

Gold is remarkable for its admirable ductility and ponderosity, wherein it excels all other bodies. Roy.
- PONDEROUS. adj. [ponderosus, from pondus, Lat.]
1. Heavy; weighty.
It is more difficult to make gold, which is the most ponderous and material amongst metals, of other metals less ponderous and material, than, via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver; both which are more ponderous than silver. Bacon.
His pond'rous shield behind him cast. Milton.

Upon

PON

- Upon laying a weight in one of the scales, inscribed eternity, though I threw in that of time, prosperity, affliction, wealth and poverty, which seemed very ponderous, they were not able to stir the opposite balance. Addison.
- Because all the parts of an undistributed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed according to the difference of it, any concretion, that can be supposed to be naturally made in such a fluid, must be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Important; momentous.
If your more ponderous and settl'd project
May suffer alteration, I'll point you Where you shall have receiving shall become you. Shakeſp.
3. forcible; strongly impulsive.
Imagination hath more force upon things living, than things inanimate; and upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Impatient of her load,
And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous god,
The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
With far superior force he press'd.
Press'd with the pond'rous blow,
Down sinks the ship within th' abyſs below. Dryden.

quets. Grew's Museum.
2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be used here.
Terpichore would be expressed, upon her head a coronet of those green feathers of the popinjays, in token of that victory which the mules got of the daughters of Pierius, who were turned into popinjays or woodpeckers. Peacocks.
3. A trifling fop.
I, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd
To be so peffer'd by a popinjay, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shakep.
- POPISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.
In this sense as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.
I know thou art religious,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shakep.
- POPISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.
She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison's Freeholder.
A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believe constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.
- POPULAR. n. f. [populier, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.
The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren: the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Miller.
Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacocks on Drawing.
All he describ'd was present to their eyes,
And as he rais'd his verse, the poplars seem'd to rise. Ross.
So falls a poplar, that in watry ground Rais'd high the head. Pope's Iliad.
- POPPY. n. f. [popis, Sax. papaver, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the poppy, for the most part, consists of four leaves, placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup, consisting of two leaves, rises the poin-tal, which afterwards becomes a fruit or pod that is oval or oblong, and adorned with a little head, under which, in some species, is opened a series of holes quite round into the cavity of the fruit, which is defended lengthwise with various leaves or plates, to which a great number of very small seeds adhere: of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

POP

- His temples last with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.
Dr. Lifter has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- POPULACE. n. f. [populace, Fr. from populus, Lat.] The vulgar; the multitude.
Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.
The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.
- POPULACY. n. f. [populace, Fr.] The common people; the multitude.
Under colours of pious ambitious policies march, not only with security, but applause as to the populace. King Charles.
When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populacy of sin upon the soul. D. of Piety.
- POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Lat.]
1. Vulgar; plebeian.
I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.
So the popular vote inclines. Milton.
2. Suitable to the common people.
Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.
3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.
It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker, b. i.
Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.
The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.
4. Studious of the favour of the people.
A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.
His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.
5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.
- POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Lat. popularité, Fr. from popular.]
1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.
The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.
Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.
- Admire we then,
Or popularity, or flars, or strings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings. Pope.
He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.
2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.
The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.
- POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]
1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.
The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.
- Nor can we execute the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.
- POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.
The population of a kingdom, especially if it be not mown down by wars, does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned, only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower, and gather more. Bacon.
- POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populus.] Populousness; multitude of people.
How it conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are two main causes of numerosity in any species;
a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Bacon.

POR

- POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakep.
Far the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.
- POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populosus.] With much people.
- POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populosus.] The state of abounding with people.
This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.
- PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from por cent annés; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain was matured under ground one hundred years.]
1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glais, and therefore semi-pellucid.
We have burials in several earthen, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.
We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble molds. Dryden.
2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]
1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.
Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Benj. Johnson.
2. A portico; a covered walk.
All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakep.
- PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi or epic, Fr. porcospino, Italian.]
The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: the quills, with which its whole body is covered, are black on the shoulders, thighs, sides and belly; on the back, hips and loins they are variegated with white and pale brown:
the neck is short and thick, the nose blunt, the nostrils very large in form of flits; the upper lip is slit or cleft as in the hare, and it has whiskers like a cat: the eyes are small, and the ears very like those of the human species: the legs are short, and on the hinder feet are five toes, but only four upon the fore feet, and its tail is four or five inches long, beset with spines in an annular series round it: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.
- This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.
Long bearded comets stick
Like flaming porcupines to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.
By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Ar. and Po.
- PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. poré.]
1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.
Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bac.
Why was the light
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore. Milton.
2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.
Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.
- TO PORE. v. n. [pore is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.
All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyefight. Shakespeare.

POR

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.
The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pores,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.
He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.
The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.
POREBLIND. adj. [commonly spoken and written partblind.] Near-sighted; shortighted.
Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperse them.
Bacon's Natural History.
PORINESS. n. f. [from por.] Fullness of pores.
I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wifem.
PORISTICK method. n. f. [ποριστικός.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways a problem may be solved. DiD.
PORK. n. f. [porc, Fr. porcus, Lat.] Swines flesh unsalted.
You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to christians, you raise the price of pork.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Flower on the Humours.
PORKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.
Strait to the lodgments of his herd he runs,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the fun. Pope.
PORKREATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.
This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkers, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
PORKET. [from pork.] A young hog.
A priest appears
And off rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.
PORKLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.
A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porklings, thou meanest to fat. Tupper.
POROSITY. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.
This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon's Natural History.
POROUS. adj. [porous, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages.
The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light; firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.
POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores.
They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.
PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, Porphyry.] Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.
I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacocks on Drawing.
Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.
PORPOISE. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
PORPUS. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatick together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.
Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a droply like a porpus. Swift.
PORPACIOUS. adj. [porraceus, Lat. porrace, Fr.] Greenish.
If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wifeman's Surgery.
PORREIT. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.
It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, molys

POR

and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PORRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Sho.
PORRIDGEPOT. n. f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.
PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.] 1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.
A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estrange.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headrest; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakespeare.
A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Latin.] The act of reaching forth.
PORT. n. f. [port, Fr. portus, Latin.] 1. A harbour; a safe station for ships.
Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair issuing on the shore,
Disburden'd her. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I should be fill
Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakespeare.
The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon, b. viii.
A weather beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.
2. [Porta, Lat. porce, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.
Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Sion. Psalms ix. 14.
Descend, and open your uncharged ports. Shakespeare.
He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath entered. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other desolate and overgrown with grass, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.
3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.
At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overlet and lost. Raleigh.
The linlocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies.
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.
4. [Portie, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing;
external appearance; demeanour.
In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face the rears up to the sky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperate ye may descry. Spenser.
Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman?
See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Poiss.
Their port was more than human, as they stood;
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.
A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Callier on Pride.
Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.
Thy plummy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Philips.
To PORT.

POR

To PORT. v. a. [porto, Lat. porter, Fr.] To carry in form.
Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Lat.] 1. Manageable by the hand.
2. Such as may be born along with one.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.
3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.
Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.
4. Sufferable; supportable.
How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
All these are portable Shakespeare, Macbeth.
With other graces weigh'd.
PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.
PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, Fr.] 1. The price of carriage.
2. [From port.] Porthole.
Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
PORTAL. n. f. [portail, Fr. porta, Italian.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.
King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
Though I should run
To those disclosing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses sleep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.
He through heav'n
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led
To God's eternal house direct the way.
The flick for air before the portal gasp.
The portal confists of a composite order unknown to the ancients. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PORTANCE. n. f. [from porter, Fr.] Air; mien; port; demeanour.
There stepped forth a goodly lady,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance born of heavenly birth. F. Qu.
Your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.
PORTASS. n. f. [sometimes called portais, and by Chaucer port-boise.] A breviary; a prayer book.
In his hand his portesse still he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Fairy Queen.
An old priest always read in his portais mumpimus domine for mumpimus; whereof when he was admonished, he said that he now had used mumpimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpimus for their new mumpimus. Camden.
PORTCULLIS. n. f. [portecullisse, Fr. quasi porta clausa.] A PORTCLUSE. } fort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.
Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong,
Neither unseemly short, nor yet exceeding long. F. Qu.
The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.
She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian pow'rs Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.
Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. More.
The gates are opened, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.
To PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To bar; to shut up.
Within my mouth you have engao'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakespeare.
PORTED. adj. [porter, Fr.] Borne in a certain or regular order.
They hem him round with ported spears. Milton.
To PORTEND. v. a. [portend, Lat.] To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.

POR

As many as remained, he earnestly exhorteth to prevent portended calamities. Hobbes.
Doth this churlish superscription Shakespeare.
Portend some alteration in good will?
A moist and a cool summer portendeth a hard winter. Bacon.
True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past. Milton.
True poets are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate. Roscommon.
The ruin of the state in the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also inferred from it as its cause. South's Sermons.
PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretoking.
Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Brown.
PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Lat.] Omen of ill; prodigy foretoking misery.
O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
My loss by dire portents the god foretold;
Yon riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentus, Lat. from portent.] Monstrous; prodigious; foretoking ill.
They are portentous things
Unto the climate, that they point at. Shakespeare.
This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch to like the king
That was. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous size
In the Hercinian forest lies. Roscommon.
Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.
Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanvil.
The petticoat will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means oblige several who are terrified or astonish'd at this portentous novelty. Addison's Spectator, N^o 127.
PORTER. n. f. [portier, Fr. from porta, Lat. a gate.] 1. One that has the charge of the gate.
Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me. Shakespeare.
Arm all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Bonj. Johnson.
Nic. Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arb.
2. One who waits at the door to receive messages.
A favorite porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.
3. [Porteur, Fr. from porta, Lat. to carry.] One who carries burthens for hire.
It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Hovell.
By porter, who can tell, whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate? Watts.
PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.
PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASS.
PORTGLAVE. n. f. [porter and glave, Fr. and Erse.] A sword bearer. Ainsworth.

PORTEREVE. } The keeper of a gate. Obsolete.
PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portico, Italian; portique, Fr.]
A covered walk; a piazza.
The rich their wealth bestow
On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in state,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryden.
PORTION. n. f. [portion, Fr. portio, Latin.] 1. A part.
These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job xxvi. 14.
Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.
In battles won, fortune a part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the fame. Waller.
Those great portions or fragments fell into the abyss; some in one posture, and some in another. Burnet.
Pirithous no small portion of the war
Press'd on, and thook his lance, Dryden.
2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.
Here their pris'n ordain'd and portion set. Milton.
Shou'd you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall? Waller.

POR

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.

When he considers the manifold temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune. Leave to thy children tumult, strife and war,

Portions of toil, and legacies of care.

4. A wife's fortune. To PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To divide; to parcel.

The gods who portion out The lots of princes as of private men.

Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Argos the feat of sovereign rule I chose,

Where my Ulysses and his race might reign, And portion to his tribes the wide domain.

2. To endow with a fortune. Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,

The young who labour, and the old who rest. PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLINESS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour.

Such pride is praise, such portlinefs is honour, That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;

And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, seemliness with portlinefs, and curtness with flayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?

PORTLY. adj. [from port.] 1. Grand of mien.

Rudely thou wrong'dst my dear heart's desire, In finding fault with her too portly pride.

Your Argosies with portly fail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Or as it were the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

A portly prince, and goodly to the fight, He seem'd a son of Anak for his height.

2. Bulky; swelling. A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Our house little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it; And that same greatness too, which our own hands

Have help'd to make so portly. PORTMAN. n. f. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports.

PORTMANTEAU. n. f. [from portemanteau, Fr.] A chest or bag in which cloaths are carried.

I defied him to carry one of my portmanteaus; but he laughed, and bid another do it.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portoise, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck.

PORTRAIT. n. f. [from portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael.

To PORTRAIT. v. a. [from portrait, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portray not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs.

I portray in Arthur before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues.

PORTRAITURE. n. f. [from portrait, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.

By the image of my cause I see The portraiture of his.

Let some strange mysterious dream, Wave at his wings in airy stream

Of lively portraiture display'd, Softly on my eye-lids laid.

Herein was also the portraiture of a hart.

POS

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Her wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessions endure. He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator.

To PORTRAY. v. a. [from portrait, Fr.] 1. To paint; to describe by picture.

The Earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple.

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Our Phenix queen was portrayed too bright, Beauty alone could beauty take to right. 2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with boastful argument portray'd. PO'RTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

PO'RTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate. PO'RTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd. The shoes put on, our faithful portress

Admits us in to form the fortres; While like a cat with walnuts thod, Stumbling at ev'ry step she trod. PO'RWIGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a po'rwigle or tadpole.

PO'RY. adj. [from porus, Fr. from por.] Full of pores. To the court arriv'd th' admiring son

Beholds the vaulted roofs of por stone. To POSE. v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction. zepele. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop. Learning was pos'd, philosophy was set,

Sophisters taken in a filier's net. How God's eternal son should be man's brother, Poseth his proudest intellectual power. As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give the following instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children.

2. To appose; to interrogate. She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no.

PO'SER. n. f. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser.

POSTED. adj. [from positus, Lat. It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false.

POSITION. n. f. [from positio, Fr. positio, Latin.] 1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams.

Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same things, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him.

By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye.

We have a different prospect of the same thing, according to the different position of our understandings toward it.

Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies.

2. Principle laid down. Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what confidence can ye accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives.

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the positions that follow, but always on those which go before.

3. Advancement of any principle. A fallacious lillation is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent.

4. [In

POS

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pompous; or a double consonant, as axile.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position. The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by-purge or vomit; as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations.

POSITIVE. adj. [from positivus, Lat. positif, Fr.] 1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself.

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied. As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son; though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion. I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season.

Some positive persisting fops we know, That, if once wrong, will needs be always so; But you, with pleasure own your errors past,

And make each day a critic on the last. 4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so.

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made.

Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see, Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

5. Having the power to enact any law. Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative.

6. Certain; assured. POSITIVELY. adv. [from positivus.] 1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

Give me some breath, some little pause, Before I positively speak in this.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

2. It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past.

3. Certainly; without dubitation. It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms. I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men.

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.] 1. Actuality; not mere negation.

The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the positiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence. This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact; in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith.

POSITIVITY. n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word.

Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too.

POSITURE. n. f. [from positura, Lat.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary.

POSNET. n. f. [from posnet, Fr. Skinner.] A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no foibles more than silver; and again whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-dishes, posnets and such other silver vessels.

POSSE. n. f. [Latin.] An armed power; from posse comitatus, the power of the shires. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him.

As if the passion that rules, were the sheriff of the place, and came with all the posse, the understanding is seized.

To POSSESS. v. a. [from possessus, Lat. posseder, Fr.] 1. To have as an owner; to be master of; to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let instructions enter Where folly now possesses.

Record a gift, Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd.

Unto his son. Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possesseth and possessioneth.

2. To seize; to obtain. The English marched towards the river Eske, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eske.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet possess'd, How much you would?

—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats. This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns. This possession us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd Of happiness or not, who am alone

From all eternity? I hope to possess chymists and corpularians of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them.

The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just sense of the vanity of these craving appetites.

Whole houses, of their whole desires possess'd, Are often ruin'd at their own request.

Of fortune's favour long possess'd, He was with one fair daughter only blest.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the duchy of Milan and the avenue of France in Italy.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possessed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness.

4. To fill with something fixed. It is of unspeakable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words and actions at some laudable end.

Those, under the great officers, know every little case that is before the great man, and if they are possessed with honest minds, will consider poverty as a recommendation.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit. Beware what spirit rages in your breast;

For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are possess'd. Inspir'd within, and yet possess'd without.

I think, that the man is possessed. To affect by intestine power.

He's possess'd with greatness, And speaks not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath. Let not your ears despite my tongue, Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Posse with rumours full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear. What fury, O son, Posse thee, to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head?

With the rage of all their race possess'd, Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest.

POSSESSION. n. f. [from possession, Fr. possessione, Lat.] 1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession.

In possession such, not only of right, I call you.

2. The thing possessed. Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possessions.

To POSSESS. v. a. [from possession, Fr. possessione, Lat.] To invest with property. Obsolete.

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possesseth and possessioneth.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [from possession.] Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

TO POSSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids. Not used.
 Swift as quicksilver it courses through
 The nat'ral gates and allies of the body;
 And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
 And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
 The thin and wholesome blood. Shaksp. Hamlet.
POSSIBILITY. n. f. [possibilitas, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.
 There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to requirer, the file of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hooker.
 Brother, speak with possibilities,
 And do not break into these woeful extremes. Shaksp.
 Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South's Sermons.
 A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.
 According to the multifariousness of this imitability, to are the possibilities of being. Norris.
 Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers's Sermons.

POWER. n. f. [potivoir, Fr.]
1. Command; authority; dominion; influence.
If law, authority and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Anthonio. Shakefp.
No man could ever have a just power over the life of another, by right of property in land. Locke.
Power is no blessing in itself, but when it is employ'd to protect the innocent. Swift.
2. Influence; prevalence upon.
This man had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. Bacon's Essays.
Dejected! no, it never shall be said,
That fate had power upon a Spartan soul;
My mind on its own centre stands unmov'd
And stable, as the fabrick of the world. Dryden.
3. Ability; force; reach.
That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.
I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r,
For your relief in my refreshing bow'r. Dryden.
You are still living to enjoy the blessings of all the good you have performed, and many prayers that your power of doing generous actions may be as extended as your will. Dry.
It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.
'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison's Guardian.
Though it be not in our power to make affliction no afflic-tion; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Atterbury's Sermons.

POW

4. Strength; motive force.
Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies, which were at rest; the effects also that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.
5. The moving force of an engine.
By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a fitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that force, which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.
6. Animal strength; natural strength.
Care, not fear; or fear not for themselves altered something the countenances of the two lovers: but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than difmayedness of courage. Sidney, b. i.
He died of great years, but of strong health and powers.
Bacon's Henry VII.
7. Faculty of the mind.
If ever
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then you shall know the wounds invisible,
That love's keen arrows make. Shakefp.
I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief. Shakefp.
In our little world, this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davis.
Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning powers of the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning powers from their unhappy slavery and darknels. Watts.
8. Government; right of governing.
My labour
Honest and lawful, to deserve my food
Of tho' who have me in their civil power. Milton.
9. Sovereign; potentate.
'Tis surprising to consider with what heats these two powers have contested their title to the kingdom of Cyprus, that is in the hands of the Turk. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
10. One invested with dominion.
After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Mat.
The fables turn'd some men to flow'rs,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial pow'rs,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Davis.
If there's a pow'r above us,
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Addis.
11. Divinity.
Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the cur'd thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Cast down thyself, and only strive to raise
The glory of thy maker's sacred name;
Use all thy pow'rs, that blest pow'r to praise,
Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the fame. Davis.
With indignation, thus he broke
His awful silence, and the pow'rs bespoke. Dryden.
Tell me,
What are the gods the better for this gold?
The wretch that offers from his wealthy store
These presents, bribes the pow'rs to give him more. Dryd.
12. Host; army; military force.
He, to work him the more mischief, sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and Redhanks into Ireland, where they got footing. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Never such a power,
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land. Shakefp. K. John.
Young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakefp.
Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?
My heart, dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain. Shakefp.
Gazellus, upon the coming of the bafia, valiantly issued forth with all his power, and gave him battle. Kneller.
13. A large quantity; a great number. In low language: as, a power of good things.
POW'ERABLE. adj. [from power.] Capable of performing any thing.
That you may see how powerable time is in altering tongues,
I will fet down the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sundry ages. Comden.

The sun and other powerfully lucid bodies dazzle our eyes.
By assuming a privilege belonging to riper years, to which a child must not aspire, you do but add new force to your example, and recommend the action more powerfully. Locke.
Before the revelation of the gospel, the wickedness and impunity of the heathen world was a much more excu-sable thing, because they had but very obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson's Sermons.
The grain-gold, upon all the golden coast of Guinea, is displayed by the rains falling there with incredible force, powerfully beating off the earth. Woodward.
PO'WERFULNESS. n. f. [from powerful.] Power; efficacy; might.
So much he stands upon the powerfulness of christian religion, that he makes it beyond all the rules of moral philosophy, strongly effectual to expel vice, and plant in men all kind of virtue. Hakewill on Providence.
PO'WERLESS. adj. [from power.] Weak; impotent.
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love. Shakefp.
POX. n. f. [properly pocks, which originally signified a small bag or puffle; of the same original, perhaps, with pouke or pouch. We still use pock, for a single puffle; pockay, Sax. pocken, Dutch.]
1. Pustules; efflorescences; exanthematous eruptions.
2. The venereal disease. This is the sense when it has no epithet.
Though brought to their ends by some other apparent disease, yet the pox hath been judged the foundation. Wiseham.
Wilt thou fill sparkle in the box,
Still ogle in the ring?
Canst thou forget thy age and pox. Dorset.
POY. n. f. [appoy, Spanish; appay, pois, Fr.] A ropedancer's pole.
To POZE. v. a. To puzzle. See POSE and APPOSE.

Of human infirmities I shall give instances, not that I design to poze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes and refluxes. Glarwill's Scops.
PRACTICABLE. adj. [practicable, Fr.]
1. Performable; feasible; capable to be practised.
This falls out for want of examining what is practicable and what not, and for want again of measuring our force and capacity with our design. L'Estrange.
An heroic poem should be more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us, than was done by the ancients. Dryden on Heroick Plays.
This is a practicable degree of christian magnanimity. Att.
Some physicians have thought, that if it were practicable to keep the humours of the body in an exact balance of each with its opposite, it might be immortal; but this is impossible in the practice. Swift.
2. Affailable; fit to be affailed.
PRACTICABLENESS. n. f. [from practicable.] Possibility to be performed.
PRACTICABLY. adv. [from practicable.] In such a manner as may be performed.
The meanest capacity, when he sees a rule practicably applied before his eyes, can no longer be at a loss how 'tis to be performed. Rogers.
PRACTICAL. adj. [practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr. from practice.]
Relating to action; not merely speculative.
The image of God was no less resplendent in man's practical understanding; namely, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
Religion comprehends the knowledge of its principles, and a suitable life and practice; the first, being speculative, may be called knowledge; and the latter, because 'tis practical, wisdom. Tillotson's Sermons.
PRACTICALLY. adv. [from practical.]
1. In relation to action.
2. By practice; in real fact.
I honour her, having practically found her among the better fort of trees. Howel's Vocal Forest.

practical.
PRACTICE. n. f. [praxivus; pratique, Fr.]
1. The habit of doing any thing.

PRA

2. Use; customary use.
Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when they are more founding, or more significant than those in practice. Dry.
Of such a practice when Ulysses told;
Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer and his bantering wit. Tate.
3. Dexterity acquired by habit.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakefp.
4. Actual performance, distinguished from theory.
There are two functions of the soul, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects, some of which only entertain our speculations, others also employ our actions; so the understanding, with relation to these, is divided into speculative and practick. South.
5. Method or art of doing any thing.
6. Medical treatment of diseases.
This disease is beyond my practice; yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
7. Exercise of any profession.
8. [Prax, Saxon, is cunning, slinefs, and thence prat, in Douglas, is a trick or fraud; latter times forgetting the original of words, applied to practice the sense of prat.] Wicked stratagem; bad artifice. A sense not now in use.
He fought to have that by practice, which he could not by prayer; and being allowed to visit us, he used the opportunity of a fit time thus to deliver us. Sidney, b. ii.
Partly with suspicion of practice, the king was suddenly turned. Sidney, b. ii.
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king. Shakefp.
Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? this needs must be practice;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither? Shakefp.
Wife flates prevent purposes
Before they come to practice, and foul practices
Before they grow to act. Denham's Sophy.
PRACTICK. adj. [praxivus; practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr.]
1. Relating to action; not merely theoretical.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences;
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorick. Shakefp.
Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they, by mutual calumnies, forfeit the practick. Gov. of the Tongue.
True piety without cessation toft
By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.
2. In Spenser it seems to signify, fly; artful.
She used hath the practick pain
Of this false footman, cloaked with simpleness. F. Queen.
Thereto his subtle engines he doth bend,
His practick wit, and his fair filed tongue,
With thousand other sleights. Fairy Queen.
To PRACTISE. v. a. [praxivus; pratique, Fr.]
1. To do habitually.
Incline not my heart to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity. Palm exli. 4.
2. To do; not merely to profess: as, to practise law or physics.
3. To use in order to habit and dexterity.
To PRACTISE. v. n.
1. To have a habit of acting in any manner formed.
Will truth return unto them that practise in her.
They shall practise how to live secure. Eclus.
Milton.
Oft have we wonder'd
How such a ruling spirit you could restrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign. Waller.
2. To transact; to negotiate secretly.
I've practis'd with him,
And found a means to let the victor know,
That Syphax and Sempronius are his friends. Addison.
3. To try artifices.
Others by guilty artifice and arts,
Of promis'd kindness practise on our hearts;
With expectation blow the passion up,
She fans the fire without one gale of hope. Granvil.
4. To use bad arts or stratagems.
If you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt Might be my question. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
If thou do'st him any slight disgrace, he will practise against thee by poison. Shakespeare's As You Like it.
5. To use medical methods.
I never thought I should try a new experiment, being little inclined to practise upon others, and as little that others should practise upon me. Temple's Mijcel.
6. To exercise any profession.
PRACTISANT. n. f. [from practise.] An agent.
Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants. Shakefp.

PRACTISER.

PRA

PRACTISER. n. f. [from practise.]
 1. One that practises any thing; one that does any thing habitually.
 We will, in the principles of the politician, shew how little efficacy they have to advance the practiser of them to the things they aspire to. South's Sermons.
 2. One who prescribes medical treatment.
 Sweet practiser, thy physick I will try,
 That ministers thine own death if I die. Shakespeare.
 I had reasoned myself into an opinion, that the use of physicians, unless in some acute disease, was a great venture, and that their greatest practisers practised least upon themselves. Temple.
PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from practise.]
 1. He who is engaged in the actual exercise of any art.
 The author exhorts all gentlemen practitioners to exercise themselves in the transitory.
 I do not know a more universal and unnecessary mistake among the clergy, but especially the younger practitioners. Sw.
 2. One who uses any fly or dangerous arts.
 There is some papistical practitioners among you. Whitgift.
 3. One who does any thing habitually.
 He must be first an exercised, thorough-paced practitioner of these vices himself. South's Sermons.
PRÆCOGNITA. n. f. [Latin.] Things previously known in order to understanding something else; thus the structure of the human body is one of the præcognita of physick.
 Either all knowledge does not depend on certain præcognita or general maxims, called principles, or else these are principles. Locke.
PRAGMA'TICK. adj. [πράγματικα; pragmaticus, Fr.]
PRAGMATICAL. adj. Meddling; impertinently busy; assuming business without leave or invitation.
 No sham so gross, but it will pass upon a weak man that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estrange.
 Common estimation puts an ill character upon pragmatick meddling people.
 He understands no more of his own affairs, than a child; he has got a sort of a pragmatical filly jade of a wife, that pretends to take him out of my hands. Arbutnot.
 The fellow grew so pragmatical, that he took upon him the government of my whole family. Arbutnot.
 Such a backwardness there was among good men to engage with an usurping people, and pragmatical ambitious orators.
 They are pragmatical enough to stand on the watch tower, but who assigned them the post? Swift.
PRAGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from pragmatical.] Meddlingly; impertinently.
PRAGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from pragmatical.] The quality of intermeddling without right or call.
PRAISE. n. f. [πρῆσις, Dutch.]
 1. Renown; commendation; fame; honour; celebrity.
 Best of fruits, whose taste has taught
 The tongue, not made for speech, to speak thy praise. Milt.
 Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease
 In costly grots and marble palaces;
 But to poor Bassus what avails a name,
 To starve on compliments and empty fame. Dryden.
 2. Glorification; tribute of gratitude; laud.
 He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Psal. xl. 3.
 To God glory and praise. Milton.
 3. Ground or reason of praise.
 Praiseworthy actions are by thee embrac'd;
 And 'tis my praise to make thy praises last. Dryden.
TO PRAISE. v. a. [praisien, Dutch.]
 1. To commend; to applaud; to celebrate.
 Will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trespass, and not praise
 Rather your dauntless virtue. Milton.
 We praise not Hector, though his name we know
 Is great in arms; 'tis hard to praise a foe. Dryden.
 2. To glorify in worship.
 The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen. Luke ii. 20.
 One generation shall praise thy works to another, and declare thy mighty works. Psal. cxlv. 4.
 Their touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd God and his works. Milton.
PRAYSEFUL. adj. [praise and full.] Laudable; commendable. Not now in use.
 Of whose high praise, and praiseful bliss,
 Goodness the pen, heaven the paper is. Sidney.
 He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
 Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman's Iliad.
PRAISER. n. f. [from praise.] One who praises; an applauder; a commender.
 We men and praisers of men should remember, that if we have such excellencies, it is reason to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are. Sidney.

PRA

Forgive me, if my verse but say you are A Sidney: but in that extend as far As loudest praisers. B. Johnson's Epig.
 Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
 And useth oft, when such a heart mislays,
 To make it good; for such a praiser prays. Donne.
PRAISEWORTHY. adj. [praise and worthy.] Commendable; deserving praise.
 The Tritonian goddess having heard
 Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd, Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
 For her praiseworthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.
 Since men have left to do praiseworthy things,
 Most think all praises flatteries; but truth brings
 That found, and that authority with her name.
 As to be rais'd by her is only fame. Ben. Johnson.
 Firmus, who seized upon Egypt, was so far praiseworthy, that he encouraged trade. Arbutnot on Cato.
PRAME. n. f. A flat bottomed boat.
TO PRANCE. v. a. [pranken, Dutch, to set one's self to show.]
 1. To spring and bound in high mettle.
 Here's no fantastick mask, nor dance,
 But of our kids that frisk and prance;
 Nor wars are seen,
 Unless upon the green,
 Two harmless lambs are butting one the other. Wotton.
 With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near,
 Now rule thy prancing steeds, lac'd charioteer. Gay.
 Far be the spirit of the chase from them,
 To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.
 2. To ride gallantly and ostentatiously.
 The horses' hoofs were broken by means of the prancings, the prancings of their mighty ones. Judges v. 22.
 I see
 Th' insulting tyrant, prancing o'er the field,
 Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,
 His horses' hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison.
 3. To move in a warlike or showy manner.
 We should neither have meat to eat, nor manufacture to cloathe us, unless we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat brass. Swift.
TO PRANK. v. a. [pranken, Dutch.] To decorate; to dress or adjust to ostentation.
 Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
 Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.
 In wine and meats she slow'd above the bank,
 And in excess exceeded her own night,
 In sumptuous tire the joy'd herself to prank,
 But of her love too lavish. Fairy Queen.
 These are tribunes of the people,
 The tongues o' th' common mouth: I despise them:
 For they do prank them in authority
 Against all noble sufferance. Shakespeare.
 Your high self,
 The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obscur'd
 With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
 Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
 That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul. Shakespeare.
 I had not unlock'd my lips
 In this unhallowed air, but that this jugler
 Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules, pranks in reason's garb. Milton.
PRANK. n. f. A frolic; a wild flight; a ludicrous trick; a wicked act.
 Lay home to him;
 Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakespeare.
 Such is thy audacious wickedness,
 Thy lewd, pestif'rous and dissolvent pranks;
 The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakespeare.
 They caus'd the table to be covered and meat set on, which was no sooner set down, than in came the harpies, and played their accustomed pranks. Raleigh.
 They put on their cloaths, and played all those pranks you have taken notice of. Addison's Guardian.
PRA'VE. n. f. [πράξις.] A leek; also a sea weed as green as a leek. Bailey.
TO PRATE. v. n. [praten, Dutch.] To talk carelessly and without weight; to chatter; to be loquacious; to prattle.
 His knowledge or skill is in prating too much. Tulser.
 Behold me, which owe
 A moiety of the throne, here standing
 To prate and talk for life and honour, 'fore
 Who please to hear. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 This starved justice hath prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the fears he hath done about Turnbal-street; and every third word a lie. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
 After Flammoek and the blacksmith had, by joint and several pratings, found tokens of consent in the multitude, they offered themselves to lead them. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Oh listen with attentive light
 To what my prating eyes indite! Cleveland.
 What

PRA

What nonsense would the fool thy master prate,
 When thou, his knave, can't talk at such a rate. Dryden.
 She first did wit's prerogative remove,
 And made a fool presume to prate of love. Dryden.
 This is the way of the world; the deaf will prate of discords in music. Watts.
PRATE. n. f. [from the verb.] Tattle; slight talk; unmeaning loquacity.
 If I talk to him; with his innocent prate,
 He will awake my mercy which lies dead. Shakespeare.
 Would her innocent prate could overcome me;
 Oh! what a conflict do I feel. Denham's Sophy.
PRA'TER. n. f. [from prate.] An idle talker; a chatterer.
 When expectation rages in my blood,
 Is this a time, thou prater; hence be gone. Southern.
PRA'TINGLY. adv. [from prate.] With tittle tattle; with loquacity.
PRATTIQUE. n. f. [French; prattica, Italian.] A licence for the master of a ship to traffick in the ports of Italy upon a certificate, that the place, from whence he came, is not annoyed with any infectious disease. Bailey.
TO PRATTLE. v. n. [diminutive of prate.] To talk lightly; to chatter; to be trivially loquacious.
 But I prattle
 Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
 I therein do forget. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 What the great ones do, the less will prattle of. Shakespeare.
 A French woman teaches an English girl to speak and read French, by only prattling to her. Locke.
 There is not so much pleasure to have a child prattle agreeably, as to reason well. Locke on Education.
 His tongue, his prattling tongue, had chang'd him quite
 To footy blackness, from the purest white. Ad. Ovid.
 A little lively rustick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle treason a whole evening. Addison.
 I must prattle on,
 And beg your pardon, yet this half hour.
 Let cred'ulous boys and prattling nurses tell,
 How if the festival of Paul be clear,
 Plenty from lib'ral horn shall flow the year. Gay.
PRATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.
 In a theatre the eyes of men,
 After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
 Are idly bent on him that enters next,
 Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
 The bookish theorick,
 Wherein the tog'd confuls can propose
 As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
 Is all his soldieriship. Shakespeare's Othello.
 The insignificant prattle and endless garrulity of the philosophy of the schools. Glanville.
PRA'TTLER. n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.
 Poor prattler! how thou talk'st?
Prattler, no more, I say;
 My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,
 Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;
 No room for prattlers there. Herbert.
PRA'VITY. n. f. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.
 Doubt not but that sin
 Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
 And therefore was law given them, to evince
 Their natural pravity. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. L'Estrange.
 I will shew how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbelief of Christianity. South.
PRAWN. n. f. A small crustaceous fish, like a shrimp, but larger.
 I had prawns, and borrowed a mess of vinegar. Shakespeare.
TO PRAY. v. n. [prayer, Fr. pregare, Italian.]
 1. To make petitions to heaven.
 I will buy with you, sell will you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.
Pray for this good man and his issue. Shakespeare.
 Ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
 Except it be to pray against thy foes. Shakespeare.
 I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. Shakespeare.
 Is any sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. Jam. v. 14.
 Unskillful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton.
 He that prays, despairs not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
 Thou, Turnus, shalt atone it by thy fate,
 And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late. Dryden.
 He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my success;
 He was so true a father of his country,
 To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.

PRE

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Wake.
 2. To entreat; to ask submissively.
 You shall find
 A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,
 Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.
Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
 The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryden.
 3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me is a slightly ceremonious form of introducing a question.
 But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? Bentley's Sermons.
 4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.
 Barnard in spirit, sense and truth abounds;
Pray then what wants he? fourscore thousand pounds. Pope.
TO PRAY. v. a.
 1. To supplicate; to implore; to address with submissive petitions.
 How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
 Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.
 2. To ask for as a supplicant.
 He that will have the benefit of this act, must pray a prohibition before a sentence in the ecclesiastical court. Ayliffe.
 3. To entreat in ceremony or form.
Pray my colleague Antonius I may speak with him;
 And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
 And pray him with the tribunes to come to me. B. Johnson.
PRAYER. n. f. [prayer, Fr.]
 1. Petition to heaven.
 They did lay their prayers, and address'd them
 Again to sleep. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 O remember, God!
 O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shakespeare.
 Were he as famous and as bold in war,
 As he is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakespeare.
 My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Romans x. 1.
 Sighs now breath'd
 Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer
 Inspir'd. Milton.
 No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
 2. Entreaty; submissive importunity.
Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stillingfleet.
PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private devotions.
 Get a prayerbook in your hand,
 And stand between two churchmen;
 For on that ground I'll build a holy descent. Shakespeare.
 I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.
PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.
TO PREACH. v. n. [predico, Lat. predicare, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.
 From that time Jesus began to preach. Mat. iv. 17.
 Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. Neb. vi. 7.
 Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. D. of Pie.
 As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentile world. D. of Pie.
 The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.
TO PREACH. v. a.
 1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.
 The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.
 2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.
 There is not any thing publicly notified, but we may properly say it is preached. Hooker.
 He oft to them preach'd
 Conversion and repentance. Milton.
 Can they preach up equality of birth,
 And tell us how we all began from earth. Dryden.
 Huge heaps of slain;
 A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
 Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.
PREACH. n. f. [prediche, Fr. from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration.
 This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PRE

PREACHER, n. f. [prescheur, Fr. from preach.]
 1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.
 The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers.
Psaln lxxviii. 11.
 You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith.
Bacon.
 Here lies a truly honest man,
 One of those few that in this town Honour all preachers; hear their own. Croshaw.
 2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.
 No preacher is listened to but time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.
PREACHMENT, n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.
 Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
 And made a preachment of your high descent. Shakesp.
 All this is but a preachment upon the text at last. L'Estrange.
PREAMBLE, n. f. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.
 How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer. Hooker, b. v.
 Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainfayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.
 Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Watson.
 This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.
 With preamble sweet
 Of charming symphony they introduce
 Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.
 I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.
PREAMBULARY, adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in PREAMBULOUS. use.
 He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.
PREAPPREHENSION, n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.
 A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PREASE, n. f. Preis; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS.
 A ship into the sacred seas,
 New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
 Chafe two and fifty youths. Chapman.
PREASING, part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.
PREBEND, n. f. [prebenda, low Latin; prebende, Fr.]
 1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.
 His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies.
 2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.
 Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.
PREBENDARY, n. f. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.
 To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubberd.
 I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift's Last Will.
PRECA'RIOUS, adj. [precarious, Lat. precarie, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskilfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.
 What subjects will precarious kings regard,
 A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.
 Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.
 This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison's Spectator.
 He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermons.
PRECA'RIOUSLY, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.
 Our scene precariously subsists too long
 On French translation and Italian song.

PRE

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
 Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.
PRECA'RIOSNESS, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.
 Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp's Surgery.
PRECAUTION, n. f. precaution, Fr. [from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.
 Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the State of the War.
 To PRECAUTION, v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.
 By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.
PRECED'NEOUS, adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for precidaneous; precidaneous, Lat. cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] previous; antecedent.
 That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 To PRECED, v. a. [precedo, Lat. preceder, Fr.]
 1. To go before in order of time.
 How are we happy, still in fear of harm;
 But harm precedes not fin. Milton.
 Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
 To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.
 The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.
 2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.
PRECEDENCE, n. f. [from precedo, Lat.]
PRECEDENCY, n. f. [from precedo, Lat.]

 Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shakesp.
 3. Adjustment of place.
 The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.
 4. The foremost place in ceremony.
 None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is small
 Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
 Will covet more. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedence. Havel.
 That person hardly will be found,
 With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
 Yet if another could precedence claim,
 My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.
 5. Superiority.
 Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.
 Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action. Locke.
PRECEDENT, adj. [precedent, Fr. precedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

 Eleven hours I've spent to write it over, Shakesp. Lear.
 The precedent was full as long a doing. A realtor.

PRE

A reason mighty, strong and effectual,
 A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
 For me, most wretched, to perform the like. Shakesp.
 No pow'r in Venice
 Can alter a decree established:
 'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
 And many an error, by the same example,
 Will rush into the state. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
 God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Such precedents are numberless; we draw
 Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.
PRECEDENTLY, adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.
PRECE'NTOR, n. f. [precentor, Lat. precentur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.
 Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hamm.
PRECEPT, n. f. [precepte, Fr. praeceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.
 The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.
 'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.
 A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.
PRECEPTIAL, adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use.
 Men
 Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
 Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
 Their counsel turns to passion, which before
 Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
 Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
 Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakesp.
PRECEPTIVE, adj. [preceptivus, Lat. from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.
 The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.
 As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.
 The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.
PRECEPTOR, n. f. [preceptor, Lat. preceptor, Fr.] A teacher; a tutor.

PRECIPICE, n. f. [praecipitium, Lat. praecipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.
 You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
 And woo your own destruction. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.
 I ere long that precipice must tread,
 Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.
 No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.
 Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
 And sinks in minutes, which in ages rofe. Dryden.
 His generous mind the fair ideas drew
 Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
 Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
 Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.
 Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then show your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.
PRECIPITANCE, n. f. [from precipitant.] Rash haste; head-PRECIPITANCY, n. f. long hurry.
 Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.
 'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glaswill.
 As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glaswill's Sleep.
 We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.
 Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Gulliver's Travels.
 A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts's Logic.
PRECIPITANT, adj. [praecipitans, Lat.]
 1. Falling or rushing headlong.
 Without longer pause,
 Downright into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 The birds heedless while they strain
 Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
 Overtakes their speed; they leave their little lives
 Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.
 2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.
 Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
 And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.
 3. Rashly hurried.
 The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.
PRECIPITANTLY, adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.
 To PRECIPITATE, v. a. [praecipito, Lat. praecipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he links, precipitately dull. Pope's Dunciad.

PRECIPITATION. n. f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.

Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-drench
Below the beam of fight, yet will I still Be this to them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. Violent motion downward.

That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge, towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.

Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those supposititious changes. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. In chymistry, Subsidency: contrary to sublimation.

Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.

Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. K. Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.

Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most descended by the way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

How precious the time is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Evelyn's Calendar.

3. Rath; heady.

Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple hold,
Advice unsafe, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

PRE

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baleneis, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; final; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The raillery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker, b. v.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker, b. ii.

He knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his midwinters present occasion,
His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shakesp.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Watts's Architecture.

In his tract my wary feet have slept,
His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Haller.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton's Opticks.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to fever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISION. n. f. [from precise.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost preciseness of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precisus, Lat.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

To PRECLUDE. v. a. [præcludo, Lat.] To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance; you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley's Sermons.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [præcocius, Lat. precocis, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in moist parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY.

PRE

PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precocius.] Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howell's Vocal Forest.

To PRECOGITATE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.] To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCEIT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceits, appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of sagacity or care, defective. Clarendon's Hist.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South's Sermons.

PRECONCEPTION. n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract.] This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract;
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakesp.

To PRECONTRACT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSE. n. f. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like præcurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shakesp.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. precursor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakesp. Tempest.

This contagion might have been prefigured upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey on the Plague.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homericides. Pope.

PREDACEOUS. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not contained in analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mour'd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain. Sa. Bayle.

PREDATORY. adj. [predatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

1. Plundering; practising rapine.

The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

PREDCESSOR. n. f. [predcessor, Fr. præ and decessor, Lat.]

1. One that was in any state or place before another.

In these pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying predcessors. Sidney.

There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites and long approved customs of our venerable predcessors. Hooker.

If I seem partial to my predcessor in the laurel, the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his predcessor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Addison.

The more beauteous Close sat to thee,
Good Howard, emulous of Apelles' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predcessor's heart. Prior.

PRE

2. Ancestors.

PREDESTINARIAN. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds the doctrine of predestination.

Why does the predestinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to ransack the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour he may secure an authentic transcript within himself. Doddy of Piety.

To PREDESTINATE. v. a. [predestino, Fr. præ and destino, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irreversible decree.

Some gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratcht face. Shakesp.

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Eph. i. 5.

To PREDESTINATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.

His ruff crest he rears,
And picks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINATION. n. f. [predestination, Fr. from predestinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

Predestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and precience, than this, that precience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and predestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predestination over-ru'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

PREDESTINATOR. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To PREDESTINE. v. a. [præ and destino.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid predestin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINATION. n. f. [predetermination, Fr. præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To PREDETERMINE. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses. Ayliffe.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicabilis, Fr. predicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of something.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

These they call the five predicables; because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr. predicamentum, Lat.]

1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also categorema or category. Harris.

If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby on Bodies.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.

The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice;
In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shakesp.

I shew the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king. Shakesp.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predicament.] Relating to predicaments.

PREDICANT. n. f. [predicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

To PREDICATE. v. a. [predico, Lat.] To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

To PREDICATE.

PRE

To PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm or speak.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating univocally touching him and any created being.

PREDICATE. n. f. [prædicatum, Lat.] That which is affirmed of the subject; as man is rational.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject.

PREDICATION. n. f. [prædicatio, Lat. from predicate.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence.

To PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Lat. predire, Fr.] To foretell; to foreknow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict public ruins, till his private are repaired.

PREDICTION. n. f. [prædictio, Lat. prediction, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These predictions are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!

Measur'd this transient world the race of time,

Till time stand fix'd.

In Christ they all meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists.

He, who prophesied the best,

Approves the judgment to the rest;

He'd rather choose, that I should die,

Than his prediction prove a lie.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Foreteller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [præ and digestion.] Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases.

To PREDISPOSE. v. a. [præ and dispose.] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun, to predispose and excite the earth and the seeds.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatreds of some persons towards others.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [præ and disposition.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

It was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predisposition of the body.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina, Lat.] Prevalence; PREDOMINANCY. n. f. [superiority; ascendancy; superior influence.]

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves and treacherous by spherical predominance.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will.

The several rays therefore in that white light do retain their colotic qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and dominor.] Prevalent; supreme in influence; ascendent.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this were predominant.

Foul subornation is predominant,

And equity exil'd your highness' land.

It is a planet, that will strike

Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful.

Those helps were overweighed by divers things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,

Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are to predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

To PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominor, Fr. præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord

Predominate in this fair lady's heart.

The gods formed womens souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate.

To PREELECT. v. a. [præ and elect.] To chuse by previous decree.

PREEMINENCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr. præ and eminence, Lat.] It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of ee, preeminence.

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epick poetry.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superstitious follies which are condemned by revealed religion.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Artelia's beauty, such, as though Artelia be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence.

He toucheth it as a special preeminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients.

I do invest you jointly with my power,

Preeminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,

Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares!

Painful preeminence.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men.

Beyond the equator, the Southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the North submits his preeminence.

PREEMINENT. adj. [preeminent, Fr. præ and eminent.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker

In goodness and in pow'r preeminent.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preeminent rights of the household of faith.

PREEPTION. n. f. [præemptio, Lat.] The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, fought to make use of this preemption, but crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over.

To PREENGAUGE. v. a. [præ and engage.] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

The world has the unhappy advantage of preengaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys.

To Cipeus by his friends his suit he mov'd,

But he was preengag'd by former ties.

Not only made an instrument;

But preengag'd without my own consent.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.] Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannull all after-contracts made by guilt.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,

Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are to predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

To PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominor, Fr. præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this

PRE

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to pre-ferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit.

All preferments should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.

All which declare a natural preference of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFERRER. [from prefer.] One who prefers.

TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figure, Lat.] To shew by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from præfigurare.] Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as præfigurations of the latter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The variety of prophecies and præfigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figure, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; and things there præfigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,

That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray,

And did præfigure here in devout taste,

The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Donne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly præfiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figure, Lat.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, præfigured unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfixo, Lat.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the præfix'd hour of her awaking,

Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shakefp.

A time præfix, and think of me at last!

Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually præfixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,

He durst that duty pay we all did owe:

Th' attempt was fair; but heav'n's præfix'd hour

Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would præfix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale's Law of England.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such præfix'd bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing; as, be præfix'd an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its præfixa and affixa, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.

It is a præfix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFIXION. n. f. [præfixion, Fr. from præfix.] The act of prefixing. Diët.

TO PREFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand.

If you consider the true cause,

Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures and præform'd faculties,

To monstrous quality; why you shall find,

That heav'n made them instruments of fear

Unto some monstrous state. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray on the Creation.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings. Shakefpere's Henry IV.

This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections upon the appearance of admonitions. Swift's Miscel.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. pregnans, Lat.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Thou

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as fame reports, was built of old

By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

PRE

Through either ocean, foolish man!

That pregnant word sent forth again,

Might to a world extend each atom there,

For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Pri.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt:

Call the floods from high, to rush amain Milton.

With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

O detestable, passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arb.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio? a knave very voluble. Shakefp. Othello.

Were't not that we stand up against them all,

'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,

Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakefp. King Lear.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakefpere.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can shew,

That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune

More pregnantly than words. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is to pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South's Sermon.

PREGUSTATION. n. f. [præ and gusto, Lat.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PREJUDGE. v. a. [prejuge, Fr. præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the dishonour of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do prejudge. Bacon.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united sense of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby. Ayliffe.

TO PREJUDICATE. v. a. [præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend

Prejudicates the business, and would seem

To have us make denial. Shakefpere.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent

Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREDICATION. n. f. [from predicare.] The act of judging beforehand.

PREDICATE. n. f. [predicatio, Fr. predicatum, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the prejudice is against, but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon, b. viii.

My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly, silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury. This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less; perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession. In some of the following examples its impropriety will be discovered. I have

I have not spake one the least word,

That might be prejudice of her present state,

Or touch of her good person. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,

Breed him some prejudice; for from this league

Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addison.

TO PREJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half-pillars wanted their expected height,

And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the sight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

No flames to captivate the mind he spreads,

Nor bribes your eyes to prejudice your heads. Anonym.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Neither must his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitefield.

I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube secur'd, and the empire sav'd,

Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd?

And would it prejudice thy softer vein,

To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL. adj. [prejudicialis, Fr. from prejudice.]

1. Obstructive by means of opposite prepossessions.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us, in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury's Sermons.

PREJUDICIALNESS. n. f. [from prejudicial.] The state of being prejudicial; mischiefousness.

PRELACY. n. f. [from prælate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ecclesiastick of the highest order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an archbishoprick and bishoprick. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.

The presbyter, puff'd up with spiritual pride,

Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,

His brethren damn, the civil power defy,

And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible. Swift.

3. Bishops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker's Dedication.

PRELATE. n. f. [prælat, Fr. prælat, Lat.] An ecclesiastick of the highest order and dignity.

It befemed not the person of so grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counsel, as the rest were, or in a common perplexity to shew himself alone secure. Hooker.

Hear him but reason in divinity,

And, all-admiring, with an inward will

You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakefp.

PRE

The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; fir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.

Yet Munster's prelate ever be accurst,

In whom we seek the German faith in vain. Dryden.

PRELATICAL. adj. [from prælate.] Relating to prelate or prelacy. Diët.

PRELATION. n. f. [prælatio, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.

In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co-partnership, without any prelation or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE. n. f. [prælatura, Lat. prælature, Fr.] The PRELATURESHIP. } state or dignity of a prelate. Diët.

PRELECTION. n. f. [prælectio, Lat.] Reading; lecture; discourse.

He that is desirous to prosecute these airy fates of infinitude, let him resort to the prælections of Pabst. Hale.

PRELIBATION. n. f. [from prælibo, Lat.] Taste beforehand; culsion previous to tasting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prælibation of those eternal joys. More's Divine Dialogues.

PRELIMINARY. adj. [præliminaire, Fr. prælimine, Lat.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majestic mien discovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY. n. f. Something previous; preparatory measures.

The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the preliminaries to the combat. Notes on liad.

PRELUDE. n. f. [prælude, Fr. prælude, Lat.]

1. Some short flight of music played before a full concert.

2. Something introductory; something that only shews what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose

His father's rebels and his brother's foes;

Those were the preludes of his fate,

That form'd his manhood, to subdue

The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great. Addison.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another. Clarissa.

TO PRELUDE. v. a. [preluder, Fr. prælude, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either longer holding out their throats,

And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,

As if all day, preluding to the fight,

PRE

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

PREMICES. n. f. [primitivæ, Lat. premites, Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premites or first gatherings. Dry.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Camden's Remains.

Thus families like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state. Swift.

To PREMISE. v. a. [præmissus, Lat.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premiseth, and then infers. Burnet.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the premier flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shaksp. Henry VI.

To PREMISE. v. a. [præmere, Lat.] To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much premiered of them. King Charles.

PREMISES. n. f. [præmissa, Lat. premisses, Fr.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premises, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker, b. iv. f. 7.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premises stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her foes conclusions were not found,
From premisses erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Miscel.

2. In low language, houses or lands; as, I was upon the premisses.

PREMISS. n. f. [præmissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition.

This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion. Watts.

PREMIUM. n. f. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run. Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large interest; and it concerned them to prefer that government, which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscel.

To PREMONISH. v. a. [præmonere, Lat.] To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous information.

After these premonishments, I will come to the comparison itself. Watson's Architecture.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event. Chapman.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service. Decay of Piety.

PREMONITORY. n. f. [from præ and monere, Lat.] Previously advising.

To PREMONSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNTURE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premuntire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for a premonere. Bramhall against Hobbs.

Woolley incurred a premunire, forfeited his honour, estate and life, which he ended in great calamity. South.

2. The penalty so incurred.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from præmunio, Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

To PRENOMINATE. v. a. [prænominare, Lat.] To forename.

He you would found,
Having ever seen, in the prænominare crimes,
The youth, you breathe of, guilty. Shaksp. Hamlet.

PRENOMINATION. n. f. [præ and nominare, Lat.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the prænomination; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prænotion, Fr. præ and notio, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

PRE

The hedgehog's pretension of winds is so exact, that it floppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto pretension of these winds ensuing. Brown.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted, by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. Shaksp. Henry VI.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.] The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a prenticeship, who sets up shop,
Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor his drop. Pope.

PRENUNCIATION. n. f. [prænuncio, Lat.] The act of telling before.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupare.] The act of taking possession before another.

To PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupare, Fr. preoccupo, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspireth to death; grief flieth to it; and fear preoccupieth it. Bacon.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, left the eye preoccupate the judgment. Watson's Architecture.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupation, Fr. from preoccupate.]

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it. South's Sermons.

To PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment. Arbutnot.

To PREOMINATE. v. a. [præ and ominare, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to preominate his death. Brown.

PREOPINION. n. f. [præ and opinio, Lat.] Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, refraining from very many things. Brown.

To PREORDAIN. v. a. [præ and ordinare.] To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin. Hammond.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd that envy'd state. Johnson.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [præ and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtesies
Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordination and first decree
Into the law of children. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Lat. preparation, Fr. from preparare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this great dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to press, with so little preparations, upon you. — You're welcome. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed. Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I wish the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike and learned preparations. Shaksp.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparativus, Fr. from preparare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work. South's Sermons.

PRE

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparativus, Fr. from preparare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons. Hooker.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the insaturation. Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Decay of Piety.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The mysteries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings. K. Charles.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it. South's Sermons.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey. Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician. Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatorius, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. Tillotson.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories. Hale.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet.

To PREPARE. v. a. [preparo, Lat. preparare, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare
Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war. Dryden.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomday wanders in the shades of night. Dryden.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,
Had not the eye been fit for vision made;
In vain the author had the eye prepar'd
With so much skill, had not the light appear'd. Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round. Addison.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation. Psaln civii. 36.

Now prepare thee for another fight. Milton.

He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe. Milton.

4. To form; to make.

The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God to feed her. Rev. xii. 6.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the floods. Psaln xxiv. 2.

5. To make by regular process: as, he prepared a medicine.

To PREPARE. v. n.

1. To take previous measures.

Efficacy is a power of speech, which represents to our minds the lively ideas of things so truly, as if we saw them with our eyes; as Dido preparing to kill herself. Peacham.

2. To make every thing ready; to put things in order.

Go in, sirrah, bid them prepare for dinner. Shaksp.

The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing. 1 Peter iii. 2.

3. To make one's self ready; to put himself in a state of expectation.

PREPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preparation; previous measures. Not in use.

In our behalf
Go levy men, and make prepare for war. Shaksp.

PREPENSED. adj. conceived; contrived beforehand: as, malice prepen-

To PREPONDER. v. a. [from preponderare.] To outweigh.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingroined to our sight, yet they are truly weakened; and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearances preponder truths. Watson's Architecture.

PRE

PREPONDERANCE. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of PREPONDERANCY. n. f. outweighing; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fifth remora fastening, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew's Musæum.

To PREPONDERATE. v. a. [preponderare, Lat.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes. Glanvill.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

To PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding increas of new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter. Locke.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be placed and fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us. Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance, we must form a judgment which side preponderates. Watts.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponderare.] The act or state of outweighing any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons. Watts's Logic.

To PREPOSE. v. a. [preposere, Fr. præponere, Lat.] To put before.

PREPOSITION. n. f. [prepositio, Fr. præpositio, Lat.] In grammar, a particle governing a case.

A preposition signifies some relation, which the thing signified by the word following it, has to something going before in the discourse; as, Cesar came to Rome. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

PREPOSITOR. n. f. [prepositor, Lat.] A scholar appointed by the master to overlook the rest.

To PREPOSSESS. v. a. [præ and posse.] To fill with an opinion unexamined; to prejudice.

She was prepossest with the scandal of salivating. Watts.

PREPOSSESSION. n. f. [from prepossest.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to pretend to him; and so to engage him in holiness first and then in bliss. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not so much wondered at. South's Sermons.

With thought, from prepossession free, reflect On solar rays, as they the light respect. Blackmore.

PREPOSTEROUS. adj. [preposterus, Lat.]

1. Having that first which ought to be last; wrong; absurd; perverted.

Put a case of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women; is not such a preposterous government against the first order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itself void? Bac.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I first Receiv'd a being! 'tis a preposterous gift,
An act at which inverted nature starts,
And blushes to behold herself so cruel. Denham.

PRE

PREPOSTEROUSLY. adv. [from preposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously. Shakep. Midl. Night's Dream.
Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs, where another hath its liver, and all the other members pre- posterously placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley's Sermons.
PREPOSTEROUSNESS. n. f. [from preposterous.] Absurdity;
wrong order or method.

PREPOTENCY. n. f. [præpotentia, Lat.] Superior power;
predominance.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals. Brown.

PREPUCE. n. f. [prepuce, Fr. præputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreskin.

The prepuce was much inflamed and swelled. Wise man.
TO PRE-REQUIRE. v. a. [præ and require.] To demand previously.

Some primary literal signification is prærequired to that other of figurative. Hammond.

PREREQUISITE. adj. [præ and requisite.] Something previously necessary.

The conformation of parts is necessary, not only unto the prerequisite and previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Before the existence of compounded body, there must be a pre-existence of active principles, necessarily prerequisite to the mixing these particles of bodies. Hale.

PREROGATIVE. n. f. [prærogative, Fr. prærogative, low Lat.]
An exclusive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prerogative. Sidney.

Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness Imparts this. Shakep.

How could communities,
The primogeniture, and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, sceptres, and crowns,
But by degree, stand in authentick place? Shakep.

The great Caliph hath an old prerogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Assyria. Kneller.

They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prerogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.

Had any of these second causes deposed God of his pre- rogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celestial enforcements? Raleigh.

They obtained another royal prerogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleasure. Davies.

The house of commons to these their prerogatives over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom still maintain'd alive,
Freedom an English subjects' sole prerogative, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

All with the dire prerogative to kill,
E'en they would have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prerogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, so as to perceive them to be different, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not consider only the prerogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Ray on the Creation.

PREROGATIVE. adj. [from prerogative.] Having an exclusive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogative'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable. Shakep.

PRES. Pres, prest, seem to be derived from the Saxon, preost, a priest; it being usual in after times to drop the letter s in like cases. Gibson's Camden.

PRESAGE. n. f. [presage, Fr. præsagium, Lat.] Prognostick; presention of futurity.

Joy and shout presage of victory. Milton.
Dreams have generally been considered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as presages of what is to happen. Addison.

Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shakep. Henry VI.

What pow'r of mind
Foreseeing, or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd
How fuch united force of gods, how fuch
As flood like tides, could ever know repulse. Milton.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey on Consumptions.

With'd freedom, I presage you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

PRE

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain signs we may presage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The foreign of the heav'n's has set on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

2. To foretoken; to foreknow.

If I may trust the flattering ruth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. Shakep.
Dreams advise some great good presaging. Milton.

That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, presages
A greater storm than all the Turkish power Can throw upon us. Denham's Sephy.

When others fell, this standing did presage
The crown shou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.

PRESAGEMENT. n. f. [from presage.]

1. Forebodement; presention.

I have spent much enquiry, whether he had any ominous presagement before his end. Wotton.

2. Foretoken.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement of ill luck, from whence notwithstanding nothing can be naturally feared. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRESBYTER. n. f. [presbyter, Lat. πρεσβύτερος.]

1. A priest.

Presbyters absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies who in their stead did but read homilies. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

2. A presbyterian.

And presbyters have their jackpuddings too. Butler.

PRESBYTERIAN. adj. [πρεσβύτερος.] Consisting of elders;
a term for a modern form of ecclesiastical government.

Chiefly was urged the abolition of episcopal, and the establishing of presbyterian government. King Charles.

PRESBYTERIAN. n. f. [from presbyter.] An abettor of presbytery or calvinistical discipline.

One of the more rigid presbyterians. Swift.

PRESBYTERY. n. f. [from presbyter.] Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the presbytery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

PRESCIENCE. n. f. [prescience, Fr. prescient.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Foretell our prescience, and esteem us not
But that of hand. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.

Prescience or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, if we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and prescience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Ral.

If certain prescience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. Mora.

Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's prescience is certain. South.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

PRESIDENT. adj. [prescient, Lat.] Foreknowing; prophetic.

Henry, upon the deliberation concerning the marriage of his eldest daughter into Scotland, had shewed himself sensible and almost president of this event. Bacon.

Who taught the nations of the field and wood?
Prescient, the tides or tempests to withstand. Pope.

PRESIDENT. adj. [prescient, Lat.] Having foreknowledge.

Thrice happy thou, dear partner of my bed,
Whole holy soul the stroke of fortune fled;
Prescient of ills, and leaving me behind,
To drink the dregs of life. Dryden's Entis.

TO PRESCIND. v. a. [prescind, Lat.] To cut off; to abstract.

A bare act of obliquity does not only prescind from, but positively deny such a special dependence. Norris.

PRESIDENT. adj. [prescindens, Lat.] Abstracting.

We may, for one single act, abstract from a reward, which nobody, who knows the prescindent faculties of the soul, can deny. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

TO PRESCRIBE. v. a. [prescribo, Lat.]

1. To set down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the strength of some negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument strong, by force whereof all things are denied, which scripture affirmeth not, or all things, which scripture prescribeth not, condemned. Hooker.

To the blanc moon her office they prescrib'd.
There's joy, when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

When parents loves are order'd by a son,
Let streams prescribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.

PRE

2. To direct medically.

The end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies. Dryden.

The extremest ways they first ordain,
Prescribing such intolerable pain,
As none but Cæsar could sustain. Dryden.

By a short account of the pressing obligations which lie on the magistrate, I shall not so much prescribe directions for the future, as praise what is past. Atterbury.

Should any man argue, that a physician understands his own art best; and therefore, although he should prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God. Swift.

TO PRESCRIBE. v. n.

1. To influence by long custom.

A reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school, where being seasoned with minor sentences, they prescribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To influence arbitrarily.

The assuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardness to prescribe to their opinions; is a constant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [Prescribo, Fr.] To form a custom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not prescribe or come into dispute, but by fifty consecutive years of exemption. Arb.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctor's bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their matters fools. Pope.

PRESIPT. adj. [prescriptus, Lat.] Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Those very laws so added, they themselves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confess both in matter of prescript attire, and of rites appertaining to burial. Hooker.

PRESIPT. n. f. [prescriptum, Lat.] Direction; precept; model prescribed.

By his prescript, a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton.

PRESCRIPTION. n. f. [prescription, Fr. prescriptio, Lat. from prescribo, Lat.]

1. Rules produced and authorized by long custom; custom continued till it has the force of law.

You tell a pedigree
Of threefore and two years, a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth. Shakep.

Use such as have prevailed before in things you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription. Bacon's Essays.

It will be found a work of no small difficulty, to dispossess a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead prescription. South's Sermons.

Our poet bade us hope this grace to find,
To whom by long prescription you are kind. Dryden.

The Lucrèce plead prescription, for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.

2. Medical receipt.

My father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects; such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected For general sovereignty. Shakep.

Approving of my obstinacy against all common prescrip- tions, he asked me, whether I had never heard the Indian way of curing the gout by moxa. Temple.

PRESEANCE. n. f. [preseance, Fr.] Priority of place in sitting.

The ghosts, though rude in their other fashions, may, for their discreet judgment in precedence and preseance, read a lesson to our civillest gentry. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

PRESENCE. n. f. [presence, Fr. presentia, Lat.]

1. State of being present; contrary to absence.

To-night we hold a solemn supper,
And I'll request your presence. Shakep.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies. Shakep. Henry VI.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discomtented with unwonted presence. Sidney, b. i.

Men that very presence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear! Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a superior.

Thou know'st the law of arms is such,
That, who draws a sword in th' presence 't's death. Sha.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts. Shakep.

Wisdom thy sister, and with her did't play
In presence of th' Almighty. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning presences. Glanvill's Scep.

PRE

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the presence bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I to pale.
—Ay; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forlook his cheeks. Shakep.

Odmar, of all this presence does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of presence, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful presence bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Collier.

How great his presence, how erect his look,
How ev'ry grace, how all his virtuous mother Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes. Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the presence mount, whole glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Fairy Queen.

An't please your grace, the two great cardinals Wait in the presence. Shakep. Henry VIII.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the presence in the court of France, and espying Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss, the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacham.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready presence of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from presence of the mind, Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superior.

To her the sov'reign presence thus reply'd. Milton.

PRESENCE-CHAMBER. n. f. [presence and chamber or room.]

PRESENCE-ROOM. } The room in which a great person receives company.

If these nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's pre- sence-room, are so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no postern to be admitted by. Locke.

Kneller, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delusive hand,
As in the presence-chamber stand. Addison.

PRESENION. n. f. [presensio, Lat.] Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's presensio of winds is exact. Brown.

PRESENT. adj. [present, Fr. presens, Lat.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commen-surate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately present with all the beings of the world. Hale.

Be not often present at feasts, not at all in dissolute company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.

Much I have heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never present on the place
Of those encounters. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things can't represent
As present. Milton.

The moments past, if thou art wife, retrieve
With pleasant mem'ry of the bliss they gave;
The present hours in pleasant mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy. Prior.

The present age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory;
if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.

'Tis a high point of philosophy and virtue for a man to be so present to himself, as to be always provided against all accidents. L'Estrange.

4. Favourably attentive; not neglectful; propitious.

Be present to her now, as then,
And let not proud and factious men Against your wills oppose their mights. Benj. Johnson.

The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' animated fair,
And gave the sign of granting his desire. Dryden.

Nor could I hope in any place but there,
To find a god so present to my pray'r. Dryden.

5. Unforgotten; not neglectful.

The ample mind keeps the several objects all within sight, and present to the soul. Watts.

6. Not abstracted; not absent of mind; attentive;

PRE

The PRESENT. An elliptical expression for the present time; the time now existing.

When he saw descend
The son of God to judge them, terrify'd
He fled; not hoping to escape, but shun
The present; fearing guilty, what his wrath Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
Men that set their hearts only upon the present, without looking forward into the end of things are struck at. L'Estr.
Who, since their own short understandings reach
No further than the present, think ev'n the wife, Speak what they think, and tell tales of themselves. Rosw.
At PRESENT. [a present, Fr.] At the present time; now;
elliptically, for the present time.
The state is at present very sensible of the decay in their trade. Addison.

PRESENT. n. f. [present, Fr. from the verb.]
1. A gift; a donative; something ceremoniously given.
Plain Clarence!

I will send thy soul to heav'n,
If heav'n will take the present at our hands. Shakespeare.
His dog to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady. Shakespeare.
He sent part of the rich spoil, with the admiral's ensign, as a present unto Solymann. Knolly's Hist. of the Turks.
Say heav'nly muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the infant God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, no solemn strain,
To welcome him to this his new abode?
They that are to love inclin'd,
Sway'd by chance, not choice or art
To the first that's fair or kind,
Make a present of their heart. Waller.
Somewhat is sure design'd by fraud or force;
Trust not their *present*s, nor admit the horse. Dryden.

2. A letter or mandate exhibited.
Be it known to all men by these *present*s. Shakespeare.
TO PRESENT. v. a. [presento, low Lat. presenter, Fr. in all the senses.]

something out of other men's writings or conversations, and is presenting him with the thoughts of other persons perpetually.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

4. To give formally and ceremoniously.
Folks in mudwall tenement,
Affording pepper-corn for rent,
Present a turkey or a hen
To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

5. To put into the hands of another.
So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight. Dryden.
6. To favour with gifts. To present, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to present a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are to present a gift to a man; or, to present the man with a gift.

Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, half no other reward, but sometimes to be smiled upon, and always to be smiled at. South's Sermons.

He now presents, as ancient ladies do,
That courted long, at length are forc'd to woo. Dryden.
Octavia presented the poet, for his admirable elegy on her son Marcellus. Dryden.

Should I present thee with rare figur'd plate,
O how thy rising heart would throb and beat. Dryden.

possible to be complied with; and therefore might securely press every article, as if they were in earnest. Swift.

7. To urge; to bear strongly on.

Chymists I may press with arguments, drawn from some of the eminentest writers of their sect. Boyle.

8. To compress; to hug, as in embracing.

He press'd her matron lips
With kisses pure. Milton.

She took her son, and press'd
Th' illustrious infant to her fragrant breast. Dryden.

His easy heart receiv'd the guilty flame,
And from that time he press'd her with his passion. Smith.

Leucothoe took,
And press'd Palemon closer in her arms. Pope.

9. To act upon with weight.

The place thou press'st on thy mother earth,
Is all thy empire now: now it contains thee. Dryden.

10. To make earnest. Press is here perhaps rather an adjective;
pressé, Fr. or from pressé or empressé, Fr.

Let them be press'd, and ready to give succours to their confederates, as it ever was with the Romans; for if the confederate had leagues defensive with divers other states, and implored their aids, the Romans would ever be the formost.

Bacon's Essays.

Press for their country's honour and their king's,
On their sharp beaks they whet their pointed things. Dryden.

11. To force into military service. This is properly impressé.

Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am press'd into it. Shakespeare.

For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd
To lift sharp steel against our golden crown, Heav'n for his Richard hath in store
A glorious angel. Shakespeare. Richard II.

From London by the king was I press'd forth. Shakespeare.

They are enforced of very necessity to press the best and greatest part of their men out of the West countries, which is no small charge. Raleigh.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army by pressing, found opposition in many places. Clarendon.

The peaceful peasant to the wars is press'd. Dryden.

Must grandon Filbert to the wars be press'd. Gay.

You were pressed for the sea-service, and got off with much ado. Swift.

TO PRESS. v. n.

1. To act with compulsive violence; to urge; to distress.

If there be fair proofs on the one side, and none at all on the other, and if the most pressing difficulties be on that side, on which there are no proofs, this is sufficient to render one opinion very credible, and the other altogether incredible. Tillotson's Sermons.

A great many uneasinesses always soliciting the will, it is natural, that the greatest and most pressing should determine it to the next action. Locke.

2. To go forward with violence to any object.

I make bold to press With so little preparation. Shakespeare.

I press toward the mark for the prize. Phil. iii. 14.

The Turks gave a great shout, and pressed in on all sides, to have entered the breach. Kneller.

Thronging crowds press on you as you pass, And with their eager joy make triumph flow. Dryden.

Th' insulting victor presses on the more, And treads the steps the vanquish'd trod before. Dryden.

She is always drawn in a posture of walking, it being as natural for Hope to press forward to her proper objects, as for Fear to fly from them. Addison on Ancient Medals.

Let us not therefore faint, or be weary in our journey, much less turn back or sit down in despair; but press cheerfully forward to the high mark of our calling. Rogers.

3. To make invasion; to encroach.

On superior powers Were we to press, inferior might on ours. Pope.

4. To crowd; to throng.

For he had healed many, inasmuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him. Mar. iii. 10.

Counsel the may; and I will give thy ear The knowledge first of what is fit to hear: What I transact with others or alone, Beware to learn; nor press too near the throne. Dryden.

5. To come unseasonably or importunately.

6. To urge with vehemence and importunity.

He pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in. Gen.

The less blood he drew, the more he took of treasure; and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other. Bacon.

So thick the shivering army stands, And press for passage with extended hands. Dryden.

7. To act upon or influence.

When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither. Addison.

8. TO PRESS UPON. To invade; to push against.

Patroclus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles. Pope.

PRESS. n. f. [pressoir, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed.

The press is full, the fats overflow. Jed. iii. 13.

When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. Hag. ii. 16.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lacteal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from the feces. Arbutnot.

They kept their cloaths, when they were not worn, constantly in a press, to give them a lustre. Arbutnot.

2. The instrument by which books are printed.

The letters are of the second edition; he will print them out of doubt, for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two in. Shakespeare.

3. Crowd; tumult; throng.

Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frightened, ran crying through the press of the people, O men wherefore do ye these things. Hooker.

She held a great gold chain yinked well, Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit, And lower part did reach to lowest hell, And all that press did round about her swell, To catchen hold of that long chain. Fairy Queen.

Who is it in the press that calls on me? I hear a tongue, shriller than all the musick, Cry, Caesar. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Death having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them invisible; his siege is now Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds With many legions of strange fantasies;

PRE

Which in their throng, and press to that last hold, Confound themselves. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears, And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryden.

A new express all Agra does affright, Darah and Aurengzebe are join'd in fight; The press of people thickens to the court, Th' impatient croud devouring the report. Dryden.

Through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies, And scatters deaths around from both her eyes. Pope.

Concerning the mufters and presses for sufficient mariners to serve in his majesty's ships, either the care is very little, or the bribery very great. Raleigh.

PRE-SSED. n. f. [press and bed.] Bed so formed, as to be shut up in a case.

PRE-SSE. n. f. [from press.] One that presses or works at a press. Of the stuffs I give the profits to dyers and pressers. Swift.

PRE-SSENG. n. f. [press and gang.] A crew that strols about the streets to force men into naval service.

PRE-SSENGLY. adv. [from pressing.] With force; closely. The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Hawd.

PRE-SSENG. n. f. [from press.] The act of pressing. If light confided only in pressing, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies, which retract and reflect it: if it confided in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion; and if it confided in pressing or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow. Newton's Opticks.

PRE-SSENG. adj. Gravitating; heavy. A word not in use. Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water are pressing in their proper places. Mars.

PRE-SSENG. n. f. [press and man.] One who forces another into service; one who forces away. One only path to all; by which the pressmen came. Chop.

2. One who makes the impression of print by the press: distinct from the compositor, who ranges the types.

PRE-SSENG. n. f. [press and money.] Money given to a soldier when he is taken or forced into the service.

Here Peasegod, take my pouch, 'tis all I own, 'Tis my pressmoney.—Can this silver fail? Gay.

PRE-SSENG. n. f. [from press.] 1. The act of pressing or crushing.

2. The state of being pressed or crushed.

3. Force acting against any thing; gravitation; pressure. The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone. Bacon.

Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure. Newton.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive. Arbutnot.

4. Violence inflicted; oppression. A wife father ingenuously confessed, that those, which persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein. Bacon's Essays.

5. Affliction; grievance; distress. Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing. King Charles.

The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressures under which it labours. Child's Discourse of Trade.

To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults. Atterbury's Sermons.

Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures, acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace. Atterbury.

6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression. From my memory I'll wipe away all trivial fond records, All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past, That youth and observation copy'd there. Shakespeare.

PREST. adj. [press or pret, Fr.] 1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word press men; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, press or ready to march at command. Each.

PRE

Each mind is press'd, and open every ear, To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us. Fairfax.

Gritus desired nothing more than, at his first entrance, to have confirmed the opinion of his authority in the minds of the vulgar people, by the press and ready attendance of the Vayvod. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

2. Neat; tight. In both senses the word is obsolete. More wealth any where, to be breese More people, more handsome and press'd Where find ye? Tusser's Husbandry.

PREST. n. f. [press, Fr.] A loan. He required of the city a prest of six thousand marks; but, after many parleys, he could obtain but two thousand pounds. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour. I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course. Hamm.

PRESUMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence. PRESUPPOSAL. n. f. [præ and supposal.] Supposal previously formed.

All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presuppositional of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded. Hooker.

TO PRESUPPOSE. v. a. [presupposere, Fr. præ and supposere.] To suppose as previous.

In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; therefore the first impediment, which naturally we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things, without which we cannot live. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand. Hooker, b. i.

PRESUPPOSITION. n. f. [presupposition, Fr. præ and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

PRE

3. Assumption; claim to notice.
Despise not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingeniously imparted. Evelyn.
4. Claim true or false.
Spirits in our just pretences arm'd Fell with us. Milton.
Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power. Locke.
5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.
I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treas'rous malice. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- To PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Lat. pretendere, Fr.]
1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used.
Lucasius, to lash his horses, bends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends. Dryden.
2. To portend; to forebode. Not in use.
All these movements seemed to be pretended by moving of the earth in Suffolk. Hayward.
3. To make any appearance of having; to allege falsely.
This let him know,
Left wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprised. Milton.
What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person. Tillotson.
4. To show hypocritically.
'Tis their interest to guard themselves from those riotous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty. D. of Piety.
5. To hold out as a delusive appearance; to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.
Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, share them. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. To claim. In this sense we rather say, pretend to.
Chiefs shall be grudging the part which they pretend. Dry.
Are they not rich? what more can they pretend? Pope.
- To PRETEND. v. n.
1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It is seldom used without shade of censure.
What peace can be, where both to one pretend?
But they more diligent, and we more strong. Dryden.
In those countries that pretend to freedom, princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen. Swift.
2. To presume on ability to do any thing; to profess presumptuously.

- PRETERITION. n. s. [preteritio, Fr. from preterit.] The act of going past; the state of being past.
- PRETERITNESS. n. s. [from preterit.] State of being past; not present; not futurity.

PRE

- We cannot conceive a preterit still backwards in infinitum, that never was present, as we can an endless futurity, that never will be present; so that though one is potentially infinite, yet nevertheless the other is positively finite: and this reasoning doth not at all affect the eternal existence of the adorable divinity, in whose invariable nature there is no past nor future. Bentley's Sermon.
- PRETERLAPSED. adj. [preterlapsus, Lat.] Past and gone.
We look with a superstitious reverence upon the accounts of preterlapsed ages. Glanvill's Scen.

There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

PRE

- The gods pray
He would resume the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harness'd steeds, that fill with horror shook. Addison.
Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevailed with to send her forces upon that expedition. Swift.
Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.
- PREVAILING. adj. [from prevail.] Predominant; having most influence.
Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same fate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.
Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rowe.
- PREVAILMENT. n. s. [from prevail.] Prevalence.
Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unhard'n'd youth. Shakespeare.
- PREVALENCE. n. s. [prevallence, Fr. prevallentia, low Lat.]

 PRINCIPATION. n. f. [from principium, Lat.] Analysis into constituent or elemental parts. A word not received. The separating of any metal into its original or element, we will call principiation. Bacon.
 PRINCIPLE. n. f. [from principium, Lat. principe, Fr.]
 1. Element; constituent part; primordial substance. Modern philosophers suppose matter to be one simple principle, or solid extension diversified by its various shapes. Watts.
 2. Original cause. Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led, From cause to cause to nature's secret head, And found that one first principle must be. Dryden.
 For the performance of this, a vital or directive principle seemeth to be assitant to the corporeal. Crow's Cognat.
 3. Being productive of other being; operative cause. The soul of man is an active principle, and will be employed one way or other. Tilleyson's Sermons.
 4. Fundamental truth; original postulate; first position from which others are deduced. Touching the law of reason, there are in it some things which stand as principles universally agreed upon; and out of those principles, which are in themselves evident, the greatest moral duties we owe towards God or man, may, without any great difficulty, be concluded. Hooker.
 All of them may be called principles, when compared with a thousand other judgments, which we form under the regulation of these primary propositions. Watts's Logic.
 5. Ground of action; motive. Farewel, young lords; these warlike principles Do not throw from you. Shakesp.
 As no principle of vanity led me first to write it, so much less does any such motive induce me now to publish it. Watts.
 There would be but small improvements in the world, were there not some common principle of action, working equally with all men. Addison's Spectator, N° 255.
 6. Tenet on which morality is founded. I'll try If yet I can subdue those stubborn principles Of faith, of honour. Addison's Cat.
 A feather shooting from another's head, Extracts his brain, and principle is fled. Pope.
 TO PRINCIPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To establish or fix in any tenet; to impress with any tenet good or ill. Wildest and best men full oft beguill'd, With goodnesses principle'd not to reject The penitent, but ever to forgive, Are drawn to wear out miserable days. Milton.
 It is the concern of his majesty, and the peace of his government, that the youth be principle'd with a thorough persuasion of the justness of the old king's cause. South.
 There are so many young persons, upon the well and ill principing of whom next under God, depends the happiness or misery of this church and state. South's Sermons.
 Governors should be well principled and good-natured. L'Estr.
 Men have been principled with an opinion, that they must not consult reason in things of religion. Locke.
 Let an enthusiast be principled, that he or his teacher is inspired, and you in vain bring the evidence of clear reasons against his doctrine. Locke.
 He seems a settled and principled philosopher, thanking fortune for the tranquility he has by her aversion. Pope to Swift.
 2. To establish firmly in the mind. The promiscuous reading of the bible is far from being of any advantage to children, either for the perfecting their reading, or principing their religion. Locke.
 PRINCOCK. n. f. [from prink or prim cock; perhaps præcox or PRINCOX.] præcox ingenium, Lat.] A coxcomb; a conceited person; a pert young rogue. You are a saucy boy; This trick may chance to scathe you I know what; You must contrary me I you are a princex, go. Shakesp.
 TO PRINK. v. n. [from prinken, Dutch.] To prank; to deck for show. Hold a good wager she was every day longer printing in the glass than you was. Art of Tormenting.
 TO PRINT. v. a. [from primer, emtreint, Fr.]
 1. To mark by pressing any thing upon another. On his fiery steed betimes he rode, That scarcely prints the turf on which he trod. Dryden.
 2. To impress any thing, so as to leave its form.
 3. To lay by impression. Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince, For she did print your royal father off. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
 Conceiving you. Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you. Lev. ix. 28.
 Perhaps some footsteps printed in the clay, Will to my love direct your wand'ring way. Rescommon.

PRI

- His royal bounty brought its own reward; And in their minds too deep did print the sense, That if their ruins sadly they regard, 'Tis but with fear. Dryden.
 4. To impress words or make books, not by the pen, but the press. Thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, built a paper-mill. Shakesp.
 This nonsense got in by a mistake of the stage editors, who printed from the piecemeal written parts. Pope.
 Is it probable, that a promiscuous jumble of printing letter should often fall into a method, which should stamp on paper a coherent discourse. Locke.
 As soon as he begins to spell, pictures of animals should be got him, with the printed names to them. Locke.
 TO PRINT. v. n. To publish a book. From the moment he prints, he must expect to hear no more truth. Pope.
 PRINT. n. f. [from imprimere, Fr.]
 1. Mark or form made by impression. Some more time Must wear the print of his remembrance out. Shakesp.
 Abhorred slave, Which any print of goodness wilt not take, Being capable of all ill! Shakesp. Tempest.
 Attend the foot, That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Shakesp.
 Up they toft the sand, No wheel seen, nor wheels print was in the mould impress Behind them. Chapman's Iliads.
 Our life so fast away doth slide, As doth an hungry eagle through the wind; Or as a ship transported with the tide, Which in their passage leave no print behind. Davies.
 My life is but a wind, Which passeth by, and leaves no print behind. Sandys.
 O'er the smooth enamell'd green, Where no print of step hath been. Milton.
 While the heav'n, by the sun's team untrod, Hath took no print of the approaching light, And all the spangled host keep watch. Milton.
 Before the lion's den appeared the footsteps of many that had gone in, but no prints of any that ever came out. South.
 Winds bear me to some barren island, Where print of human feet was never seen. Dryden.
 From hence Aftrea took her flight, and here The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.
 If they be not sometimes renewed by repeated exercise of the senses or reflection, the print wears out. Locke.
 2. That which being impressed leaves its form.
 3. Pictures cut in wood or copper to be impressed on paper. It is usual to say wooden prints and copper plates. Picture made by impression. From my breast I cannot tear The passion, which from thence did grow; Nor yet out of my fancy rafe The print of that suppoled face. Waller.
 The prints, which we see of antiquities, may contribute to form our genius, and to give us great ideas. Dryden.
 Words standing for things, should be expressed by little draughts and prints made of them. Locke.
 5. The form, size, arrangement, or other qualities of the types used in printing books. To refresh the former hint; She read her maker in a fairer print. Dryden.
 6. The state of being published by the printer. I love a ballad in print, or a life. Shakesp.
 It is so rare to see Ought that belongs to young nobility In print, that we must praise. Sackling.
 His natural antipathy to a man, who endeavours to signalize his parts in the world, has hindered many persons from making their appearance in print. Addison.
 I published some tables, which were out of print. Arbut.
 The rights of the christian church are scornfully trampled on in print. Atterbury.
 7. Single sheet printed and fold. The prints, about three days after, were filled with the same terms. Addison.
 The public had said before, that they were dull; and they were at great pains to purchase room in the prints, to testify under their hands the truth of it. Pope.
 Inform us, will the emperor treat, Or do the prints and papers lie? Pope.
 8. Formal method. Lay his head sometimes higher, sometimes lower, that he may not feel every little change, who is not designed to have his maid lay all things in print, and tuck him in warm. Locke.
 PRINTER. n. f. [from print.]
 1. One that prints books. I find, at reading all over, to deliver to the printer, in that which I ought to have done to comply with my design, I am fallen very short. Digby.

PRI

- To buy books, only because they were published by an eminent printer, is much as if a man should buy cloaths that did not fit him, only because made by some famous tailor. Pope.
 See, the printer's boy below; Ye hawkers all, your voices lift. Swift.
 2. One that stains linen. PRINTLESS. adj. [from print.] That which leaves no impression. Ye elves, And ye, that on the sands with printless foot Do chase the ebbing Neptune. Shakesp. Tempest.
 Whilst from off the waters fleet, Thus I set my printless feet O'er the cowlip's velvet head, That bends not as I tread. Milton.
 PRIOR. adj. [from prior, Lat.] Former; being before something else; antecedent; anterior. Whenever tempted to do or approve any thing contrary to the duties we are enjoined, let us reflect that we have a prior and superior obligation to the commands of Christ. Rogers.
 PRIOR. n. f. [from prior, Fr.]
 1. The head of a convent of monks, inferior in dignity to an abbot. Neither she, nor any other, besides the prior of the convent, knew any thing of his name. Addison's Spectator.
 2. Prior is such a person, as, in some churches, presides over others in the same churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 PRIORESS. n. f. [from prior.] A lady superior of a convent of nuns. When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men, But in the presence of the prioress. Shakesp.
 The reeve, miller and cook are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking wife of Bath. Dryden.
 PRIORITY. n. f. [from prior, adj.]
 1. The state of being first; precedence in time. From son to son of the lady, as they should be in priority of birth. Hayward.
 Men still affirm, that it killeth at a distance, that it poisoneth by the eye, and by priority of vision. Brown.
 This observation may assist, in determining the dispute concerning the priority of Homer and Hesiod. Broome.
 Though he oft renew'd the fight, And almost got priority of fight, He ne'er could overcome her quite. Swift.
 2. Precedence in place. Follow, Cominius, we must follow you, Right worthy your priority. Shakesp.
 PRIORSHIP. n. f. [from prior.] The state or office of prior. PRIORY. n. f. [from prior.]
 1. A convent, in dignity below an abbey. Our abbies and our priories shall pay This expedition's charge. Shakesp. King John.
 2. Priories are the churches which are given to priors in titulum, or by way of title. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 PRISEGE. n. f. [from prise.] Prisage, now called butlerage, is a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark laden with wine, containing less than forty tuns, two tuns of wine at his price. Covel.
 PRISM. n. f. [from prisme, Fr. πρίσμα.] A prism of glass is a glass bounded with two equal and parallel triangular ends, and three plain and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end. Newton's Opticks.
 Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds Form fronting, on the sun, thy showery prism. Thomson.
 PRISMATICK. adj. [from prismatique, Fr. from prisme.] Formed as a prism. If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry. Derham.
 False eloquence, like the prismatick glass, Its gaudy colours spreads on every place; The face of nature we no more survey, All glares alike, without distinction gay. Pope.
 PRISMATICALLY. adv. [from prismatique.] In the form of a prism. Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur or mercury befalls the glass, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.
 PRISMATID. n. f. [from πρίσμα and ιδεω.] A body approaching to the form of a prism. PRISON. n. f. [from prison, Fr.] A strong hold in which persons are confined; a goal. He hath commissiion To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shakesp. King Lear.
 I thought

PRI

For those rebellious here their pris'n ordain'd. Milton.
 I thought our utmost good
 Was in one word of freedom understood,
 The fatal blessing came; from prison free,
 I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily.
 Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
 Set open to your slave the prison door. Dryden.
 The tyrant Æolus,
 With pow'r imperial, curbs the struggling winds,
 And sounding tempests in dark prisons binds. Dryden.
 He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is presently at liberty. Locke.
 To PRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To imprison; to shut up in hold; to restrain from liberty,
 2. To captivate; to enchain.
 Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
 They, as they sung, would take the prison d' soul, Milton.
 And lap it in Elysium.
 3. To confine.
 Universal plodding prisons up
 The nimble spirits in the arteries. Shakespeare.
 Then did the king enlarge
 The spleen he prison'd. Chapman's Iliads.
PRISONER. n. f. [from the noun.]
 1. A kind of rural play, commonly called prisoners.
 The spachies of the court play every friday at cicio di canni, which is no other than prisoners upon horseback, hitting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands. Sandys's Travels.
PRISONER. n. f. [from the noun.]
 1. One who is confined in hold.
 Cesar's ill-erected tower,
 To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
 Is doomed a prisoner. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
 The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and naftily kept. Bacon.
 He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only to his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom. Decay of Piety.
 A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would;
 and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.
 2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.
 So oft as homeward I from her depart,
 I go like one that having lost the field,
 Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.
 There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English. Bacon.
 He yielded on my word,
 And as my prisoner, I restore his sword. Dryden.
 3. One under an arrest.
 Tribune, a guard to seize the empress straight,
 Secure her person prisoner to the state. Dryden.
PRISONHOUSE. n. f. Gaol; hold in which one is confined.
 I am forbid to tell the secrets of my prisonhouse. Shakespeare.
PRISONMENT. n. f. [from prison.] Confinement: imprisonment; captivity.
 May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,
 But hold himself safe in his prisonment. Shakespeare.
PRISTINE. adj. [from pristinus, Lat.] First; ancient; original.
 Now their pristine worth
 The Britons recollect. Phillips.
 This light being trajected only through the parallel super-ficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.
PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.
 Well, what was that scream for, I prithee? L'Estrange.
 Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
 To shock the peace of my departing soul?
 Away! I prithee leave me! Rowe's Jane Shore.
PRIVACY. n. f. [from privatus.]
 1. State of being secret; secrecy.
 2. Retirement; retreat.
 Clamours our privacies uneasy make, Birds leave their nests disturb'd, and beasts their haunts forsake. Dryden.
 3. [From privatus, Fr.] Privacy; joint knowledge; great familiarity. Privacy in this sense is improper.
 You see Frog is religiously true to his bargain, scorns to hearken to any composition without your privacy. Arbutnot.
 4. Taciturnity. Ainsworth.
PRIVADO. n. f. [Spanish.] A secret friend.
 The lady Brampton, an English lady, embarked for Portugal at that time, with some privados of her own. Bacon.
PRIVATE. adj. [from privatus, Lat.]
 1. Not open; secret.
 You shall go with me;
 I have some private schooling for you. Shakespeare.

PRI

Fancy retires
 Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
 The harmless freedom, and the private friend. Anon.
 2. Alone; not accompanied.
 3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.
 When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were not private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politic overrule all private of like nature in the same body. Hooker's Preface.
 He fues
 To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
 A private man in Athens. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
 What infinite heartseale must kings neglect,
 That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
 That private have not too, fave ceremony? Shakespeare.
 Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house. Peacham of Antiquities.
 The first principles of christian religion should not be faced with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.
 Dare you,
 A private man presume to love a queen. Dryden.
 4. Particular; not relating to the publick.
 My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
 5. In PRIVATE. Secretly; not publicly; not openly.
 In private grieve, but with a careless scorn;
 In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
PRIVATE. n. f. A secret message.
 His private with me of the dauphin's love,
 Is much more general than these lines import. Shakespeare.
PRIVATEER. n. f. [from privatus.] A ship fitted out by private men to plunder enemies.
 He is at no charge for a fleet, further than providing privateers, wherewith his subjects carry on a pyrrical war at their own expence. Swift's Miscellanies.
 To PRIVATEER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit out ships against enemies, at the charge of private persons.
PRIVATELY. adv. [from privatus.] Secretly; not openly.
 There, this night,
 We'll pass the business privately and well. Shakespeare.

 community.
 2. Secrecy; privacy.
 Ambassadors attending the court in great number, he did content with courtesy, reward and privateness. Bacon.
 3. Obscurity; retirement.
 He drew him into the fatal circle from a resolved privateness, where he bent his mind to a retired course. Watson.
PRIVATION. n. f. [from privatio, Fr. privatio, Lat.]
 1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.
 For, what is this contagious fun of kind,
 But a privation of that grace within.
 So bounded are our natural desires,
 That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
 With bare privation sense is satisfy'd. Dryden.
 After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.
 A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine un-learned; these are privations. Watts's Logic.
 2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.
 3. The act of degrading from rank or office.
 If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.
 If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.
PRIVATIVE. adj. [from privatus, Fr. privativus, Lat.]
 1. Causing privation of any thing.
 2. Consisting in the absence of something; not positive. Priv-ative is in things, what negative is in propositions.
 The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.
 The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life. Taylor.
PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.
 Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRIVATIVELY.

PRI

PRIVATIVELY. adv. [from privatus.] By the absence of something necessary to be present; negatively.
 The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaicall observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.
PRIVATIVENESS. n. f. [from privatus.] Notation of absence of something that should be present.
PRIVET. n. f. The leaves grow by pairs opposite to each other;
 the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided at the top into five segments; the ovary in the center of the flower-cup becomes a globular soft fruit full of juice, in which are lodged four seeds. Miller.
PRIVET. n. f. Evergreen. It is distinguished from the phillyrea by the leaves being placed alternately upon the branches, whereas those of the phillyrea are produced by pairs opposite to each other: it hath three seeds inclosed in each berry, whereas the phillyrea has but one. Miller.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privilegium, Lat.]
 1. Peculiar advantage.
 Here's my sword,
 Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
 My oath, and my profession. Shakespeare.
 He went Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege
 Hath omnipotence. Milton.
 He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,
 Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham.
 Smiles, not allow'd to beasts, from reason move,
 And are the privilege of human love. Dryden.
 The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke.
 2. Immunity; publick right.
 I beg the ancient privilege of Athens.
 A soul that can securely death defy,
 And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.
 To PRIVILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.
 The great are privileg'd alone,
 To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.
 He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
 To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
 Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
 Ordain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.
 2. To exempt from censure or danger.
 The court is rather deemed as a privileged place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney, b. ii.
 He took this place for sanctuary,
 And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakespeare.
 This place
 Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.
 3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.
 Many things are by our laws privileged from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.
PRIVILEGE. adv. [from privus.] Secretly; privately.
 They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spenser's State of Ireland.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privus, Fr. from privus.]
 1. Private communication.
 I will unto you in privilege discover the drift of my purpose;
 I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.
 2. Confidentiality; joint knowledge; private concurrence.
 The authority of higher powers have force even in these things which are done without their privilege, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
 Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
 Without the privilege o' th' king, to appoint
 Who should attend him? Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privilege of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.
 3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.
 Few of them have any thing to cover their privities. Abbot.
PRIVY. adj. [from privus, Fr.]
 1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.
 The party, gainst the which he doth contrive,
 Shall seize on half his goods; the other half Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakespeare.
 2. Secret; clandestine.
 He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inso much that the bruit of his manlines was spread every where. 2 Mac. viii. 7.
 3. Secret; not shown.
 The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezek. xxii. 14.
 4. Admitted to secrets of state.
 The king has made him
 One of the privy council. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of king Charles I. till the restoration, desired to be made a privy councillor. Speculator, N^o 629.

PRO

5. Conscious to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.
 Sir Valentine
 This night intends to steal away your daughter;
 Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakespeare.
 Many being privy to the fact,
 How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd?
 He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Gulliver's Travels.
PRIVY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.
 Your fancy
 Would still the same ideas give ye,
 As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.
PRIZE. n. f. [from præ, Fr.]
 1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.
 If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakespeare.
 I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dryden.
 The railing such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.
 2. A reward gained by any performance.
 True poets empty fame and praise despise,
 Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.
 3. [From præ, Fr.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.
 The king of Scots the did send to France,
 To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
 And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
 As is the oozy bottom of the sea. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 With finken wreck. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.
 Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
 Soon to obtain and long possess the prize:
 The pow'r's gave ear. Pope.
 To PRIZE. v. a. [from appræ; priser, Fr. appræciare, Lat.]
 1. To rate; to value at a certain price.
 Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
 Which I would free. Shakespeare.
 Cast it unto the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at of them. Lech. xi. 13.
 2. To esteem; to value highly.
 I go to free us both of pain;
 I prize d' your person, but your crown disdain. Dryden.
 Some the French writers, some our own despise;
 The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.
PRIZER. n. f. [from priser, Fr. from priser.] He that values.
 It holds its estimate and dignity,
 As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
 As in the prizer. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
PRIZEFIGHTER. n. f. [from prize and fighter.] One that fights publicly for a reward.
 Martin and Crambe engaged like prizefighters. Arb. and Po.
 In fig the prizefighter by day delight. Brampton.
PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.
 Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.
 Matthew met Richard, when
 Of many knotty points they spoke,
 And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.
PROBABILITY. n. f. [from probabilis, Lat. probabilis, Fr. from probare.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.
 Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.
 As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker's Preface.
 If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debate it to a downright fallacy. South's Sermons.
 Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds, as are fit fully to satisfy a prudent man.
 Tillotson's Sermons.
 For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.
PROBABLE. adj. [from probable, Fr. probabilis, Lat.] Likely;
 having more evidence than the contrary.
 The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

PRO

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.
They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they converted, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South's Sermons.
PROBABLY, adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.
Distinguishing betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange's Fables.
Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.
PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dict.
PROBATION, n. f. [from probatio, Lat. from probo, Lat. probation, Fr.]
1. Proof; evidence; testimony.
Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakefp. Hamlet.
He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.
When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.
3. [Probation, Fr.] Trial; examination.
In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. Trial before entrance into monastick life; noviciate.
I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.
PROBATIONARY, adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.
PROBATIONER, n. f. [from probation.]
1. One who is upon trial.
Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did practise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.
Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.
2. A novice.
This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.
PROBATIONERSHIP, n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.
He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.
PROBATORY, adj. [from probo, Lat.] Serving for trial.
Job's afflictions were no vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.
PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.
Vain the concern that you express,
That uncalled Alard will possess
Your house and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted less
By Banquo's restless sprite:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice probatum est?
Why do the gods indulge our store,
But to secure our rest. Prior.
PROBE, n. f. [from probo, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.
I made search with a probe. Wise's Surgery.
PROBE-SCISSORS, n. f. [from probe and scissor.] Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.
The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wise's Surgery.
TO PROBE, v. a. [from probo, Lat.] To search; to try by an instrument.
Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom. South's Sermons.
He'd raise a bluish, where secret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently probed the wound. Dryden.
PROBITY, n. f. [from probitas, Lat.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.
The truth of our Lord's ascension, might be deduced from the probitas of the apostles. Fiddes's Sermons.
So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probitas of mind. Pope.
PROBLEM, n. f. [from problema, Fr. πρόβλημα.] A question proposed.

PRO

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing, that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Although in general one understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Brown.
This problem let philosophers resolve.
What makes the globe from West to East revolve. Blackm.
PROBLEMATICAL, adj. [from problem; problematicus, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.
I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.
Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guilt, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.
PROBLEMATICALLY, adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.
PROBOSCIS, n. f. [from proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance therunto.
The elephant wreath'd to make them sport
His lithe proboscis. Milton.
PROCA'CIUS, adj. [from procaax, Lat.] Petulant; loose. Dict.
PROCA'CIETY, n. f. [from procaaxius.] Petulance. Dict.
PROCATARCTICK, adj. [from procatarctikos.] Forerunning; antecedent. See PROCATARXIS.
James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his death, without the precedence of any procatarctick cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey on Consumption.
The physician enquires into the procatarctick causes. Harv.
PROCATARXIS, n. f. [from procatarctikos.]
Procatarxis is the pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasion a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatarctick cause. Quincy.
PROCEDURE, n. f. [from procedere, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.
This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligation upon man. South.
2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.
Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weight, all these have their distinct order and procedure. Hale's Origin of Morality.
3. Produce; thing produced.
No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any morsel or herby substance. Bacon.
TO PROCEED, v. n. [from procedo, Lat. procedo, Fr.]
1. To pass from one thing or place to another.
Adam
Proceeded thus to ask his heav'nly guest. Milton.
Then to the prelude of a war proceeds;
His horns, yet fore, he tries against a tree. Dryden.
I shall proceed to more complex ideas. Locke.
2. To go forward; to tend to the end designed.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
These things, when they proceed not, they go backward. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
3. To come forth from a place or from a tender.
I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Jo. viii. 42.
4. To go or march in state.
He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in. Ann.
5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of; to be produced from.
A dagger from the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakefp. Macbeth.
From me what proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will both depriv'd. Milt.
All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryd.
6. To prosecute any design.
He that proceeds upon other principles, in his enquiry into any sciences, posits himself in a party. Locke.
Since husbandry is of large extent, the poet singles out such precepts to proceed on, as are capable of ornament. Addis.
7. To be transacted; to be carried on.
He will, after his four fashion tell you,
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day. Shakefp.
8. To make progress; to advance.
Violence
Proceeded, and oppression and sword law
Through all the plain. Milton.
9. To carry on juridical process.
Proceed by process, left parties break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans. Shakefp.
Instead of a ship, to levy upon his country such a sum of money for his majesty's use, with direction in what manner he should proceed against such as refused. Clarendon.
To judgment he proceeded on the accus'd. Milton.
10. To transact; to act; to carry on any affair methodically.
From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they law. Milton.

PRO

How severely with themselves proceed,
The men who write such verse as who can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare,
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care. Pope.
11. To take effect; to have its course.
This rule only proceeds and takes place, when a person cannot of common law condemn another by his sentence. Addis.
12. To be propagated; to come by generation.
From my loins thou shalt proceed. Milton.
13. To be produced by the original efficient cause.
O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
All things proceed, and up to him return. Milton.
PROCEED, n. f. [from the verb.] Produce: as, the proceeds of an estate. Clarissa. Not an imitable word, though much used in law writings.
PROCEEDER, n. f. [from proceed.] One who goes forward; one who makes a progress.
He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often failing; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. Bacon.
PROCEEDING, n. f. [from proceed, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Progress from one thing to another; series of conduct; transaction.
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens,
With all your just proceedings in this case. Shakefp.
My dear love
To your proceedings bids me tell you this. Shakefp.
The understanding brought to knowledge by degrees, and, in such a general proceeding, nothing is hard. Locke.
It is a very unusual proceeding, and I would not have been guilty of it for the world. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
From the earliest ages of christianity, there never was a precedent of such a proceeding. Swift.
2. Legal procedure: as, such are the proceedings at law.
PROCEEDINGS, adj. [from proceeding, Lat.] Tempestuous. Dict.
PROCESSION, n. f. Procession; act of taking something sooner than another. A word not in use.
Having too little power to offend others, that I have none to preserve what is mine own from their procession. King Charles.
PROCESSION, n. f. [from procerus, Lat.] Talness; height of stature.
We shall make attempts to lengthen out the humane figure, and restore it to its ancient procerity. Addis.
PROCESS, n. f. [from procedo, Fr. processus, Latin.]
1. Tendency; progressive course.
That there is somewhat higher than either of these two, no other proof doth need, than the very process of man's desire, which being natural should be frustrate, if there were not some farther thing wherein it might rest at the length contented, which in the former it cannot do. Hooker.
2. Regular and gradual progress.
Commend me to your honourable wife;
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you; speak me fair in death. Shakefp.
They declared unto him the whole process of that war, and with what success they had endured. Knolles.
Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion; but to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.
Attends the fatal process of the war. Dryden.
In the parable of the wasteful steward, we have a lively image of the force and process of this temptation. Rogers.
3. Course; continual flux or passage.
I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years; if in the course
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too against mine honour aught,
Turn me away. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
This neither empire rise,
By policy and long process of time. Milton.
Many acts of parliament have, in long process of time, been lost, and the things forgotten. Hale's Law of England.
4. Methodical management of any thing.
Experiments, familiar to chymists, are unknown to the learned, who never read chymical processes. Boyle.
An age they live releas'd
From all the labour, process, clamour, woe,
Which our sad fancies of daily action know. Prior.
5. Course of law.
Proceed by process,
Left parties, as he is below'd, break out. Shakefp.
All processes ecclesiastical should be made in the king's name, as in writs at the common law. Hayward.
The patricians they chose for their patrons, to answer for their appearance, and defend them in any process. Swift.
PROCESSION, n. f. [from procedo, Fr. processio, Lat.] A train marching in ceremonious solemnity.
If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them, that no one can be spared. Hooker.
Him all his train
Follow'd in bright procession. Milton.

She to the palace led her guest,
Then offer'd incense, and proclaim'd a feast. Dryden.
2. To tell openly.
Some prodigal wretches, were the apprehensions of punishments or shame taken away, would as openly proclaim their atheism, as their lives do. Locke.
While the deathless muse
Shall sing the just, shall o'er their head diffuse Perfumes with lavish hand, she shall proclaim Thy crimes alone. Prior.
3. To outlay by publick denunciation.
I heard myself proclaim'd. Shakefp.
PROCLAIMER, n. f. [from proclaim.] One that publishes by authority.
The great proclaimers, with a voice
More awful than the sound of trumpet, cry'd
Repentance, and heaven's kingdom nigh at hand
To all baptiz'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
PROCLAMATION, n. f. [from proclamatio, Lat. proclamation, Fr. from proclaim.]
1. Publication by authority.
2. A declaration of the king's will openly published among the people.
If the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation against those proclamations. Clarendon.
PROCLIVITY, n. f. [from proclivitas, Lat.]
1. Tendency; natural inclination; propension; proneness.
The sensitive appetite may engender a proclivity to steal, but not a necessity to steal. Bramhall against Hobbs.
2. Readiness; facility of attaining.
He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness, that his brothers might keep pace with him. Watson.
PROCLIVOUS, adj. [from proclivus, Lat.] Inclined; tending by nature. Dict.
PROCONSUL, n. f. [Latin.] A Roman officer, who governed a province with consular authority.

TO PROCRASTINATE, v. a. [from procrastinus, Lat.] To defer; to delay; to put off from day to day.
Hopeless and helpless doth Aegeon wind,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakefp.

PRO

Let men seriously and attentively listen to that voice within them, and they will certainly need no other medium to convince them, either of the error or danger of thus procrastinating their repentance. Decay of Piety.

To PROCRASTINATE. v. n. To be dilatory.
I procrastinate more than I did twenty years ago, and have several things to finish, which I put off to twenty years hence. Swift to Pope.

PROCRASTINATION. n. f. [procrastinatio, Lat. from procrastinatus.] Delay; dilatoriness.
How desperate the hazard of such procrastination is, hath been convincingly demonstrated by better pens. D. of Piety.

PROCRASTINATOR. n. f. [from procrastinate.] A dilatory person.

PROCREANT. adj. [procreans, Lat.] Productive; pregnant.
The temple haunting martlet, does approve
By his lov'd mansion, that heaven's breath Smells wooingly here: no jutting frieze,
But this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shakefp.

To PROCREATE. v. a. [procreo, Lat. procreo, Fr.] To generate; to produce.
Flies crushed and corrupted, when inclosed in such vessels, did never procreate a new fly. Bentley.
Since the earth retains her fruitful power,
To procreate plants the forest to restore;
Say, why to nobler animals alone
Should she be feeble, and unfruitful grown. Blackmore.

PROCREATION. n. f. [procreation, Fr. procreatio, Lat. from procreo.] Generation; production.
The enclosed warmth, which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Neither her outside form'd so fair, nor ought In procreation common to all kinds. Milton's Par. Lost.
Uncleanliness is an unlawful gratification of the appetite of procreation. South's Sermons.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship. Clarendon.

PROCURBENT. adj. [procumbens, Latin.] Lying down; prone.

PROCURABLE. adj. [from procure.] To be procured; obtainable; acquirable.
Though it be a far more common and procurable liquor than the infusion of lignum nephriticum, it may yet be easily substituted in its room. Boyle on Colours.

PROCURACY. n. f. [from procure.] The management of any thing.

PROCURATION. n. f. [from procure.] The act of procuring.
Those, who formerly were doubtful in this matter, upon strict and repeated inspection of these bodies, and procuration of plain shells from this island, are now convinced, that these are the remains of sea-animals. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PROCURATOR. n. f. [procurator, Fr. from procure, Lat.]
Manager; one who transacts affairs for another.
I had in charge at my depart from France,
As procurator for your excellence, Shakefp.
To marry princes Marg'ret for your grace.
They confirm and seal
Their undertaking with their dearest blood,
As procurators for the commonweal. Daniel.
When the procurators of King Antigonus imposed a rate upon the sick people, that came to Edepsum to drink the waters which were lately sprung, and were very healthful, they instantly dried up. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

PRO

PROCURATORIAL. adj. [from procurator.] Made by a proctor.
All procuratorial exceptions ought to be made before testation of suit, and not afterwards, as being dilatory exceptions, if a proctor was then made and constituted. Ayliffe.

PROCURATORY. adj. [from procurator.] Tending to procuratorship.

To PROCURE. v. a. [procure, Lat. procurer, Fr.]
1. To manage; to transact for another.
2. To obtain; to acquire.
They shall fear and tremble, for all the prosperity that I procure unto it. For. xxxiii. 9.
Happy though but ill,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton.
We no other pains endure,
Than those that we ourselves procure. Dryden.
Then by thy toil procur'd, thou food shalt eat. Dryden.

3. To persuade; to prevail on.
Is it my lady mother?
What unaccustom'd cause procures her hither? Shakefp.
Whom nothing can procure,
When the wide world runs bias, from his will
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill. Herbert.

4. To contrive; to forward.
Proceed, Salinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all. Shakefp.

To PROCURE. v. n. To bawd; to pimp.
Our author calls colouring, lena fororis, in plain English, the bawd of her sister, the design or drawing: the cloaths, the dresses her up, she paints her, she makes her appear more lovely than naturally she is, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
With what impatience must the muse behold,
The wife by her procuring husband sold. Dryden.

PROCUREMENT. n. f. The act of procuring.
They mourn your ruin as their proper fate,
Cursing the empress; for they think it done
By her procurement. Dryden's Aurenga.

PROCURER. n. f. [from procure.]
1. One that gains; obtainer.
Angling was after tedious study, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Walton's Angler.
2. Pimp; pandar.
Strumpets in their youth, turn procurers in their age. South.

PROCURESS. n. f. [from procure.] A bawd.
I saw the most artful procuress in town, seducing a young girl. Shakefp.

PRODIGAL. adj. [prodigus, Lat. prodigus, Fr.] Profuse; wasteful; expensive; lavish; not frugal; not parcimonious.
Least I should seem over prodigal in the praise of my countrymen,
I will only present you with some few verses. Camd.
Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did flave the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. Shakefp.
My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gagged. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than the rest;
whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you will take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.
As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these affairs, now those,
Though prodigal of life, disdains to die
By common hands. Denham.
Here patriots live, who for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.
The prodigal of soul rush'd on the stroke
Of lifted weapons, and did wounds provoke. Dryden.
O! beware,
Great warrior, nor too prodigal of life,
Expose the British safety. Philips.
Some people are prodigal of their blood, and others so sparing, as if so much life and blood went together. Baker.

PRODIGAL. n. f. A waster; a spendthrift.
A beggar suddenly grown rich, becomes a prodigal; for to obscure his former obscurity, he puts on riot and excess. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.

Thou
Ow'st all thy losses to the fates; but I,
Like wasteful prodigals, have cast away
My happiness. Denham's Solym.
Let the wasteful prodigal be slain. Dryden.

Fram'd in the prodigality of nature, Shakefp.
The spacious world cannot again afford.
He that decries covetousness, should not be held an adviser
fary to him that opposeth prodigality. Glanvil.

PRO

It is not always so obvious to distinguish between an act of liberality and act of prodigality. South's Sermons.
The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of his wit, though at the same time he could have wished, that the matter of it had been a better manager. Dry.

PRODIGALLY. adv. [from prodigal.] Profusely; wastefully; extravagantly.
We are not yet so wretched in our fortunes, Nor in our wills so lost, as to abandon
A friendship prodigally, of that price
As is the senate and the people of Rome. B. Johnson.
I cannot well be thought so prodigally thirty of my subjects blood, as to venture my own life. King Charles.
The next in place and punishment are they,
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools, who repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate. Dryden.
Nature not bounteous now, but lavish grows,
Our paths with flow'rs the prodigally strows. Dryden.

of being mended with new. Mortimer.
Numbers of Scots are glad to exchange their barren hills for our fruitful vales to productive of that grain. Swift.
Hymen's flames like stars unite,
And burn for ever one;
Chaste as cold Cynthia's virgin light, Productive as the sun. Pope.
Plutarch, in his life of Theseus, says, that that age was productive of men of prodigious stature. Boome.
PRO'EM. n. f. [πρόομιον; proemium, Lat. proeme, old Fr.]
Preface; introduction. Milton.
So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd.
Thus much may serve by way of proem,
Proceed we therefore to our poem. Swift's Miscel.
Justinian has, in the proem to the digests, only prefixed
the term of five years for studying the laws. Ascham.
PROFANA'TION. n. f. [profanation, Fr. from profano, Lat.]
1. The act of violating any thing sacred.
He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself; how hardly that house would be kept from impious profanation he knew. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
What I am and what I would, are to your ears, divinity; to any others, profanation. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
'Twere profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.
All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.
Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.
2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.
Great men may jest with fables, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shaksp.
PROFANE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]
1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.
Profane fellow! Shaksp. As You Like It.
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
These have caus'd the weak to fumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.
2. Not sacred; secular.
The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new-found world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be souls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
To PROFANE. v. a. [profano, Lat. profanar, Fr.]
1. To violate; to pollute.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight, Profaning this most honourable order. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Foretasted fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.
Pity the temple profaned of ungodly men. 2 Mac. viii. 2.
How far have we
Profan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd. Dryden.
2. To put to wrong use.
I feel me much to blame. Shaksp. As You Like It.
So idly to profane the precious time.
PROFANELY. adv. [from profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.
I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. 2 Esdr. xv. 8.
Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. B. Johns.
That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Boome's Notes on the Odyssey.
PROFANER. n. f. [from profane.] Polluter; violator.
The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use whereunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour stained steel. Shaksp. As You Like It.
There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests. Gov. of the Tongue.
PROFANENESS. n. f. [from profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred; pollution.
My great profaneness gainst thy oracle
You can banish from thence scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets and their actors. Dry-

PRO

Edicts against immorality and profaneness, laws against oaths and execrations, we trample upon. Shaksp. As You Like It.
PROFECTION. n. f. [profectio, Lat.] Advance; progression.
This, with profectio of the horoscope, unto the seventh house or opposite signs, every seventh year oppresseth living natures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To PROFESS. v. a. [professus, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. To declare himself in strong terms of any opinion or passion.
Would you have me speak after my custom,
As being a profess'd tyrant to their sex?
Pretending first Wife to fly pain, professing next the spy.
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee.
A foe profess to barren chastity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
2. To make a show of any sentiments by loud declaration.
Love well your father;
To your professing bosoms I commit him. Shaksp. As You Like It.
3. To declare publicly one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.
What, matter, read you? first resolve me that.
—I read that I profess the art of love.
Without eyes thou shalt want light; profess not the knowledge therefore that thou hast not. Lucius iii. 25.
To PROFESS. v. n.
1. To declare openly.
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They profess, that they know God, but in works they deny him. Tit. i. 16.
Profess unto the Lord, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord sware unto our fathers. Deut. xxv. 3.
2. To declare friendship. Not in use.
As he does conceive.
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever Profess'd to him; why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Shaksp. As You Like It.
PROFESS'EDLY. adv. [from professus.] According to open declaration made by himself.
I could not grant too much to men, that being profess'dly my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.
Virgil, whom he profess'dly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
England I travelled over, profess'dly leaching all places I passed along. Woodward.
PROFESS'ION. n. f. [professio, Fr. from professus.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than Your high profession spiritual. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all professions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our profession keep wounds tented. Wideman.
No other one race, nor the sons of any one other profession, nor perhaps altogether, are so much scattered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Sprat's Sermon.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged. Watts.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glanville's Scyl.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.
3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.
For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn profession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillotson's Sermon.
When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their profession, the complaint was applicable to christians. Swift.
PROFESS'IONAL. adj. [from professio.] Relating to a particular calling or profession.
Profess'ional, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.
PROFESS'OR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professus.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon's Essays.
2. One who publicly practises or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences, are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.
3. One who is visibly religious.
Ordinary illiterate people, who were professors, that shew'd a concern for religion, seem'd much conversant in St. Paul's Epistles. Lake.
PROFESS'ORSHIP. n. f. [from professor.] The station or office of a public teacher.
Dr. Prideaux succeeded him in the professorship, being then elected bishop of Worcester, Sanderson succeeded him in the regius professorship. Wotton.
To PROFFER.

PRO

To PROFFER. v. a. [profero, Lat. profferer, Fr.]
1. To propose; to offer.
To them that covet such eye-glutting gain,
Proffer thy gifts, and fitter servants entertain. Fairy Queen.
None, among the choice and prime
Of those heav'n-warring champions, could be found
So hardy as to proffer, or accept Alone, the dreadful voyage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Does Cato send this answer back to Cæsar,
For all his generous cares and proffer'd friendship? Addis. Ainsworth.
2. To attempt.
PROFFER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Offer made; something proposed to acceptance.
Basilus, content to take that, since he could have no more, allow'd her reasons, and took her proffer thankfully. Sidney.
Proffers, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Shaksp. As You Like It.
The king
Great proffers sends of pardon and of grace,
If they would yield, and quietness embrace. Daniel.
He made a proffer to lay down his commission of command in the army. Clarendon.
But these, nor all the proffers you can make,
Are worth the heifer which I set to stake. Dryden.
2. Effay; attempt.
It is done with time, and by little and little, and with many essays and proffers. Bacon's Essays.
PROFFERER. n. f. [from proffer.] He that offers.
Maids, in modesty, say no, to that Which they would have the profferer construe ay. Shaksp. As You Like It.
He who always refuses, taxes the profferer with indiscretion, and declares his assistance needless. Collier.
PROFICIENCY. n. f. [from proficio, Lat.] Profit; advance.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [from proficiens, Lat.] ment in any thing; improvement gained.
It is applied to intellectual acquisition.
Persons of riper years, who flock'd into the church during the three first centuries, were obliged to pass through instructions, and give account of their proficiency. Addison.
Some reflecting with too much satisfaction on their own proficiencies, or presuming on their election by God, persuade themselves into a careless security. Rogers's Sermons.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [from proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language. Shaksp. As You Like It.
I am dispos'd to receive further light in this matter, from those whom it will be no disparagement for much greater proficients than I to learn. Boyle.
Young deathlings were, by practice, made Proficients in their father's trade. Swift's Miscel.
PROFICUOUS. adj. [proficuous, Lat.] Advantageous; useful.
It is very proficuous, to take a good large dose. Harvey.
To future times
Proficuous, such a race of men produce,
As in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
Her throne inviolate. Philips.
PROFITE. n. f. [profite, Fr.] The side face; half face.
The painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, or else shadow the more imperfect side. Dryden.
Till the end of the third century, I have not seen a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile, which gives us the view of a head very majestic. Addison.
PROFIT. n. f. [profit, Fr.]
1. Gain; pecuniary advantage.
Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour. Shaksp. As You Like It.
He thinks it highly just, that all rewards of trust, profit, or dignity should be given only to those, whose principles direct them to preserve the constitution. Swift.
2. Advantage; accession of good.
What profit is it for men now to live in heaviness, and after death to look for punishment? 2 Esdr. vii. 47.
Wisdom that is hid, and treasure that is hoarded up, what profit is in them both? Eccles. xi. 30.
Say not what profit is there of my service; and what good things shall I have hereafter. Eccles. xi. 23.
The king did not love the barren wars with Scotland, though he made his profit of the noise of them. Bacon.
3. Improvement; advancement; proficiency.
To PROFIT. v. a. [profit, Fr.]
1. To benefit; to advantage.
Whereto might the strength of their hands profit me. Job.
Let it profit thee to have heard,
By terrible example, the reward
Of disobedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To improve; to advance.
'Tis a great means of profiting yourself, to copy diligently excellent pieces and beautiful designs. Dryden.
To PROFIT. v. n.
1. To gain advantage.
The Romans, though possess'd of their ports, did not profit much by trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

PRO

2. To make improvement.
Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them;
that thy profiting may appear to all. 1 Tim. iv. 15.
She has profited so well already by your counsel, that she can say her lesson. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To be of use or advantage.
Oft times nothing profits more;
Than self-esteem ground'd on just and right. Milton.
What profited thy thoughts, and toils, and cares,
In vigour more confirm'd, and riper years? Prior.
PROFITABLE. adj. [profitable, Fr. from profitus.]
1. Gainful; lucrative.
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man;
Is not so estimable or profitable,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shaksp. As You Like It.
The planting of hop-yards, sowing of wheat and rape-seed, are found very profitable for the planters, in places apt for them, and consequently profitable for the kingdom. Bacon.
2. Useful; advantageous.
To wail friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Then Judas, thinking indeed that they would be profitable in many things, granted them peace. 2 Mac. xii.
What was so profitable to the empire, became fatal to the emperor. Arbutnot on Coins.
PROFITABLENESS. n. f. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfulness.
2. Usefulness; advantageousness.
We will now briefly take notice of the profitableness of plants for physick and food. More's Antidote against Atheism.
What shall be the just portion of those, whom neither the condescension or kindness, nor wounds and sufferings of the son of God could persuade, nor yet the excellency, easiness and profitableness of his commands invite? Calamy's Sermons.
PROFITABLY. adv. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfully.
2. Advantageously; usefully.
You have had many opportunities to settle this reflection, and have profitably employed them. Wake.
PROFITLESS. adj. [from profitus.] Void of gain or advantage.
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest, which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain. Shaksp. As You Like It.
To wake and wage a danger profitless.
PROFLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Lat.] Abandoned; lost to virtue and decency; shameless.
Time sensibly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worse than theirs,
And we than ours; next age will see
A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have skill enough to be. Resc.
How far have we
Prophan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love. Dryden.
Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather chuse
To guard your honour, and your life to lose. Dryden.
Melancholy objects and subjects will, at times, impress the most profligate spirits. Clarissa.
PROFLIGATE. n. f. An abandoned shameless wretch.
It is pleasant to see a notorious profligate seized with a concern for his religion, and converting his spleen into zeal. Add.
I have heard a profligate offer much stronger arguments against paying his debts, than ever he was known to do against christianity; because he happened to be closer press'd by the bailiff than the parson. Swift's Miscellanies.
How could such a profligate as Antony, or a boy of eighteen, like Octavius, ever dare to dream of giving the law to such an empire and people. Swift.
To PROFLIGATE. v. a. [profligo, Lat.] To drive away. A word borrowed from the Latin without alteration of the sense, but not used.
Lavatories, to wash the temples, hands, wrists, and ju-gulars, do potentially profligate and keep off the venom. Harv.
PROFLIGATELY. adv. [from profligatus.] Shamelessly.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift's Miscellanies.
PROFLIGATENESS. n. f. [from profligatus.] The quality of being profligate.
PROFLUENCE. n. f. [from profuans.] Progress; course.
In the profuence or proceedings of their fortunes, there was much difference between them. Wotton.
PROFLUENT. adj. [from profuans, Lat.] Flowing forward.
Teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe Baptizing in the profuence stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin. Milton.
PROFOUND.

PRO

PROFOUND. adj. [profund, Fr. profundus, Lat.]
 1. Deep; descending far below the surface; low with respect to the neighbouring places.
 All else deep snow and ice,
 A gulf profound, as that Serbonian bog
 Betwixt Damietta and mount Casius old. Milton.
 He hath hither thrust me down Into this gloom of Tartarus profound. Milton.
 2. Intellectually deep; not obvious to the mind; not easily fathomed by the mind; as, a profound treatise.
 3. Lowly; humble; submissive.
 What words wilt thou use to move thy God to hear thee?
 what humble gestures? what profound reverence? Du'pa.
 4. Learned beyond the common reach; knowing to the bottom.
 Not orators only with the people, but even the very profoundest disputers in all faculties, have hereby often, with the best learned, prevailed most. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 5. Deep in contrivance.
 The revolters are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them. Holbe v. 2.
PROFOUND. n. f.

2. Advancement; motion forward.
 Through all thy veins shall run
 A cold and drowzy humour, which shall seize Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep His nat'ral progress, but surcease to beat. Shaksp.
 This motion worketh in round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it findeth the deliverance easiest. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Whosoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the earth, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable. Burnet.
 It is impossible the mind should ever be stopp'd in its progress in this space. Locke.
 The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into the endless expansion. Locke.
 Perhaps I judge hastily, there being several, in whose writings I have made very little progress. Swift's Miscel.
 3. Intellectual improvement; advancement in knowledge.
 Solon the wise his progress never ceas'd,
 But still his learning with his days increas'd. Denham.
 It is strange, that men should not have made more progress in the knowledge of these things. Burnet.
 Several defects in the understanding hinder it in its progress to knowledge. Locke.
 Others despond at the first difficulty, and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.
 4. Removal from one place to another.
 From Egypt arts their progress made to Greece,
 Wrapt in the fable of the golden fleece. Denham.
 5. A journey of state; a circuit.
 He gave order, that there should be nothing in his journey like unto a warlike march, but rather like unto the progress of a king in full peace. Bacon.
 O may I live to hail the day,
 When the glad nation shall survey
 Their sovereign, through his wide command, Passing in progress o'er the land. Addison.
TO PROGRESS. v. n. [progressio, Lat.] To move forward; to pass. Not used.

It is the property of an old finner to find delight in reviewing his own villanies in others. South's Sermons.

3. Right of possession.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Property, whose original is from the right a man has to use any of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the proprietor, so that he may even destroy the thing that he has property in. Locke.

4. Possession held in one's own right.

For numerous blessings yearly shou'd, And property with plenty crown'd, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

5. The thing possessed.

'Tis a thing impossible I should love thee but as a property. Shakefp.

No wonder such men are true to a government, where liberty runs so high, where property is so well secured. Swift.

6. Nearness or right. I know not which is the sense in the following lines.

Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity, and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me, Hold thee. Shakefp. King Lear.

7. Something useful; an appendage.

I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. Shakefp. Midsummer's Night's Dream.

The purple garments raise the lawyer's fees, High pomp and state are useful properties. Dryden.

Greenfield was the name of the property man in that time, who furnished implements for the actors. Pope.

8. Property for propriety. Any thing peculiarly adapted.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Camden.

To PROPERTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with qualities.

His rear'd arm Crested the world; his voice was property'd As all the tuned spheres. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

2. To seize or retain as something owned, or in which one has a right; to appropriate; to hold. This word is not now used in either meaning.

His large fortune Subdues and properties to his love and tendance All forts of hearts. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

They have here property'd me, keep me in darkness, and do all they can to face me out of my wits. Shakefp.

I am too highborn to be property'd, To be a secondary at controul. Shakefp. King John.

PRO

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree:
Greater visible good does not always raise men's desires, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.
He must be little skilled in the world, who thinks that men's talking much or little shall hold proportion only to their knowledge. Locke.
Several nations are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they converse more or less with those of the reformed churches. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
In proportion as this resolution grew, the terrors before us seemed to vanish. Tatler, N^o 81.
3. Harmonick degree.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and purf'd tranſverſe the reſonant fugue. Milton.
4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.
It must be mutual in proportion due.
Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton.
No man of the present age is equal in the strength, proportion and knitting of his limbs to the Hercules of Farnese. Dryden's Dufreſney.
The proportions are so well observed, that nothing appears to an advantage, or distinguishes itself above the rest. Addiſon.
Harmony, with ev'ry grace,
Plays in the fair proportions of her face. Mrs. Carter.
5. Form; size.
All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;
So little glaffes little faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are wear'd. Davies.
To PROPORTION. v. a. [from proportion, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To adjust by comparative relation.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects, are opposite. Hooker.
Till body up to spirit work, in bounds Proportion'd to each kind. Milton.
In the loss of an object, we do not proportion our grief to the real value it bears, but to the value our fancies set upon it. Addison's Spectator, N^o 256.
2. To form symmetrically.
Nature had proportioned her without any fault, quickly to be discovered by the senses; yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in. Sidney.
PROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted by comparative relation; such as is fit.
His commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance proportionable to the difficulty. Tillotson.
It was enlivened with an hundred and twenty trumpets, assisted with a proportionable number of other instruments. Add.
PROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from proportion.] According to proportion; according to comparative relations.
The mind ought to examine all the grounds of probability, and upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive it proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability, on one side or the other. Locke.
The parts of a great thing are great, and there are proportionably large estates in a large country. Arbutnot.
Though religion be more eminently necessary to those in stations of authority, yet these qualities are proportionably conducive to publick happiness in every inferior relation. Rogers.
PROPORTIONAL. adj. [from proportion, Fr. from proportion.] Having a settled comparative relation; having a certain degree of any quality compared with something else.
As likely tasting to attain Proportional accents, which cannot be
But to be gods or angels. Milton's Par. Lost.
Four numbers are said to be proportional, when the first containeth, or is contained by the second, as often as the third containeth, or is contained by the fourth. Cocker.
If light be swifter in bodies than in vacuo in the proportion of the lines which measure the refraction of the bodies, the forces of the bodies to reflect and refract light, are very nearly proportional to the densities of the same bodies. Newton.
PROPORTIONALITY. n. f. [from proportional.] The quality of being proportional.
All sense, as grateful, dependeth upon the equality or the proportionality of the motion or impression made. Grew.
PROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from proportional.] In a stated degree.
If these circles, whilst their centres keep their distances and positions, could be made less in diameter, their interfering one with another, and by consequence the mixture of the heterogeneous rays would be proportionally diminished. Newton.
PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.
The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate. Grew.
The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes;

PRO

- but the invention of burning glasses depended on a proportionate; for that figure, which contracts the species of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied. Grew's Cosm.
In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power, to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, so far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.
To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.] To adjust, according to settled rates, to something else.
The parallelism and due proportionate inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.
Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionate by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and defend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space. Bentley's Sermon.
PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.
By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception, as is necessary for its sensible being. Hale.
PROPOSAL. n. f. [from propos.]
1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick refusal. Milton.
The work, you mention, will sufficiently recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals. Add. to P.
2. Offer to the mind.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than refuse it. South.
This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the first proposal. Autenbury.
To PROPOSE. v. a. [from propos, Fr. proponere, Lat.] To offer to the consideration.
Raphael to Adam's doubt propos'd, Benevolent and facil thus reply'd. Milton.
My design is to treat only of those, who have chiefly proposed to themselves the latter as the principal reward of their labours. Tatler, N^o 81.
In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first proposed to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part. Watts.
To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.
Run thee into the parlour,
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice, Proposing with the prince and Claudio. Shakeſp.
PROPOSER. n. f. [from propos.] One that offers any thing to consideration.
Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer, as coming from God. Locke.
He provided a statute, that whoever proposed any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck; if the matter proposed were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hanged. Swift.
PROPOSITION. n. f. [from propositio, Fr. propositio, Lat.]
1. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or decreed.
Chrysippus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself. Hammond.
The compounding of the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition. Hale.
2. Proposal; offer of terms.
The enemy sent propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted. Clarendon.
PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.] Considered as a proposition.
If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals. Watts's Logic.
To PROPOUND. v. a. [from propono, Lat.]
1. To offer to consideration; to propose.
The parliament, which now is held, decreed
Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.
To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule. Daniel.
Dar'it thou to the son of God propound
To worship thee. Milton.
The greatest stranger must propound the argument.
The arguments, which christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently. Tillotson.
2. To offer; to exhibit.
A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him. Shakeſp.
PROPOUNDER. n. f. [from propound.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.

PROPRIETARY.

PRO

- PROPRIETARY. n. f. [from proprietaire, Fr. from propriety.] Possessor in his own right.
'Tis a great mistake to think ourselves stewards in some of God's gifts, and proprietaries in others: they are all equally to be employed, according to the designation of the donor. Government of the Tongue.
PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.
Though sheep, which are proprietary, are seldom marked, yet they are not apt to straggle. Grew's Cosm.
PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprium, Lat.] A possessor in his own right.
Man, by being master of himself, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labour of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property.
Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor. Rogers.
PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprietrix.] A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.
A big-bellied bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burthen in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her excuse. L'Estrange.
PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprietas, Fr. proprietas, Lat.]
1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.
You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,
Know womens hearts like straws do move. Suckling.
Benefit of peace, and vacation for piety, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
Hail wedded love! mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise! of all things common else. Milton.
They secure propriety and peace. Dryden.
To that we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Autenbury.
2. Accuracy; justness.
Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language. Locke.
PROPT. for propried. [from prop.] Sustained by some prop.
See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propt in some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.
To PROPUGN. v. a. [from propugnare, Lat.] To defend; to vindicate.
Thankfulness is our meet tribute to those sacred champions for propugning of our faith. Hammond.
PROPUGNATION. n. f. [from propugnatio, from propugnare, Latin.] Defence.
What propugnatio is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Shakeſp. Troilus and Cressida.
PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugnare.] A defender.
So zealous propugnars are they of their native creed, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. G. v. of the Tongue.
PROPUSSION. n. f. [from propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.
Joy worketh by propulsin of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon.
The evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsin be carried off with the fluid continually. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PRORE. n. f. [from prore, Lat.] The prow; the forepart of the ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.
There no vessel, with vermilion prore,
Or bark of traffick, glides from shore to shore. Pope.
PROROGATION. n. f. [from prorogatio, from prorogare, Lat. prorogatio, Fr.]
1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.
The funnels and effluence of man's enjoyments in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition, but only of the prorogation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South.
2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.
It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a prorogation. Swift.
To PROROGUE. v. a. [from prorogare, Lat. prorogare, Fr.]
1. To protract; to prolong.
He prorogued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from publick cares. Dryden.
2. To put off; to delay.
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love. Shakeſp.
3. To interrupt the session of parliament to a distant time.
By the king's authority alone, they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.
PRORUPTION. n. f. [from proruptus, from prorumpere, Lat.] The act of bursting out.

PRO

- Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereat, excluding but one a day, the latter brood impatient by a forcible prorupcion anticipates their period of exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PROSA'ICK. adj. [from prosaicus, Fr. prosaicus, from prosa, Lat.] Belonging to prose; resembling prose.
To PROSCRIBE. v. a. [from proscribo, Lat.]
1. To censure capitally; to doom to destruction.
Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and proscribed. Spenser.
I hid for thee
Thy murder of thy brother, being so brib'd;
And writ him in the list of my proscrib'd. Benj. Johnson.
After thy fact.
Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,
But dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense. Roscommon.
Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed if taken by us in that sense, in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South's Sermons.
2. To interdict. Not in use.
He shall be found;
And taken or proscrib'd this happy ground. Dryden.
PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribere.] One that dooms to destruction.
The triumvir and proscriber had descended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden.
PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [from proscriptio, Lat.] Doom to death or confiscation.
You took his voice who should be prickt to die,
In our black sentence and proscription. Shakeſp.
Sylla's old troops
Are needy and poor; and have but left t' expect From Catiline new bills and new proscriptions. B. J. bnf.
For the title of proscription or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon.
PROSE. n. f. [from prosa, Fr. prosa, Lat.] Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discourse not metrical.
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
The reformation of prose was owing to Boccace, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue, though many of his phrases are become obsolete. Dryden.
A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more diffuse. Add.
Prose men alone for private ends,
I thought; forsook their ancient friends.
I will be still your friend in prose:
Esteem and friendship to express;
Will not require poetick dress. Swift.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse man and prose man, term me which you will. Pope.
To PROSECUTE. v. a. [from prosequor, prosecutus, Lat.]
1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right? Shakeſp.
I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Milton's Agonistes.
He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent fallies. Locke.
2. To continue; to carry on.
The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward.
All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free. Daniel.
He infested Oxford, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon.
With louder cries
She prosecutes her griefs, and thus replies. Dryden.
3. To proceed in consideration or disquisition of any thing.
It were an infinite labour to prosecute those things, so far as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker, b. iv. f. 1.
4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.
5. To prosecute differs from persecute: to persecute always implies some cruelty, malignity or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.
PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]
1. Pursuit; endeavour to carry on.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail, jade, and tire in the prosecution. South.
Their jealousy of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their aversions towards us. Addison.
2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.
PROSECUTOR. n. f. [from prosecutor.] One that carries on any thing; a pursuer of any purpose; one who pursues another by law in a criminal cause.

PRO

PROSELYTE. n. f. [προσelyτης; proselitus, Fr.] A convert; one brought over to a new opinion.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselite. Cleaveland.
Men become professors and combatants for those opinions they were never convinced of, nor proselites to. Locke.
Where'er you tread,
Millions of proselites behind are led,
Through crowds of new-made converts fill you go. Grano.
What numbers of proselites may we not expect. Addison.
TO PROSELYTE. v. a. To convert. A bad word.
Men of this temper cut themselves off from the opportunities of proseluting others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.
PROSEMINATION. n. f. [proseminatio, proseminatus, Lat.] Propagation by seed.
Touching the impossibility of the eternal succession of men, animals or vegetables by natural propagation or prosemination, the reasons thereof shall be delivered. Hale.
PROSOPIAN. n. f. [from prosopeia] One skilled in metre or prosody.
Some have been so bad prosopians, as from thence to derive malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil. Brown.
PROSODY. n. f. [prosodie, Fr. προσώδια.] The part of grammar which teaches the sound and quantity of syllables, and the measures of verse.
PROSOPOPIA. n. f. [προσωποποιία; prosopeia, Fr.] Personification; figure by which things are made persons.
These reasons are pathetically urged, and admirably raised by the prosopeia of nature speaking to her children. Dryden.
PROSPECT. n. f. [prospectus, Lat.]
1. View of something distant.
Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a freer prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Deacy of Piety.
It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.
2. Place which affords an extended view.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
Thus pake. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
3. Series of objects open to the eye.
There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.
4. Object of view.
Man to himself
Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.
Present, sad prospect! can he ought desire,
But what affects his melancholy eye;
The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast. Prior.
5. View into futurity: opposed to retrospect.
To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.
Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.
6. Regard to something future.
Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life. Tillotson.
TO PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Lat.] To look forward. Dict.
PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.] Viewing at a distance.
1. Viewing at a distance.

dustrious and prospective too in this affair. Child.
TO PROSPER. v. a. [prosperus, Lat.] To make happy; to favour.
Kind gods, forgive
Me that, and prosper him. Shakespeare, King Lear.
All things concur to prosper our design;
All things to prosper any love but mine. Dryden.
TO PROSPER. v. n. [prosperus, Fr.]
1. To be prosperous; to be successful.
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. If.
This man encreased by little and little, and things pro- spersed with him more and more. 2 Mac. viii. 8.
Surer to prosper, than prosperity
Could have assur'd us. Milton.

PRO

2. To thrive; to come forward.
All things do prosper best, when they are advanced to the better; a nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground, than that whereunto you remove them. Idem.
The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.
She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom. Milton.
PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Lat. prosperitas, Fr.] Success; attainment of wishes; good fortune.
Prosperity, in regard of our corrupt inclination to abuse the blessings of Almighty God, doth prove a thing dangerous to the souls of men. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.
God's justice reaps that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
PROSPEROUS. adj. [prosperus, Lat.] Successful; fortunate.
Your good advice, which still hath been both grave
And prosperous. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Either state to bear prosperous or adverse.
May he find
A happy passage, and a prosperous wind. Denham.
PROSPEROUSLY. adv. [from prosperus.] Successfully; fortunately.
Prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
In 1596, was the second invasion upon the main territories of Spain, prosperously achieved by Robert earl of Essex, in conform with the earl of Nottingham. Bacon.
Those, who are prosperously unjust, are intitled to pance-rick, but afflicted virtue is stabbed with reproaches. Dryden.

fever, watching, and prosternation of spirits. Wifeman.
PROSTHESIS. n. f. [προσθησις.] In surgery, that which fills up what is wanting, as when fistulous ulcers are filled up with flesh.
TO PROSTITUTE. v. a. [prostituere, Lat. prostituere, Fr.]
1. To sell to wickedness; to expose to crimes for a reward. It is commonly used of women sold to whoredom by others or themselves.
Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore.
Levi. xix. 29.
Marrying or prostituting,
Rape or adultery. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Who shall prevail with them to do that themselves which they beg of God, to spare his people and his heritage, to prostitute them no more to their own insatiable designs. D. of Pi.
Affections, consecrated to children, husbands, and parents, are vilely prostituted and thrown away upon a hand at loo. Add.
2. To expose upon vile terms.
It were unfit, that so excellent and glorious a reward, as the gospel promises, should stoop down like fruit upon a full laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand, that heaven should be prostituted to foolish men. Tillotson.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostituatus, Lat.] Vicious for hire; sold to infamy or wickedness; sold to whoredom.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
By sloth corrupted, by disorder fed,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread. Prior.
PROSTITUTE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A hireling; a mercenary; one who is set to sale.
At open fulsome bawdry they rejoice,
Bale prostitute! thus dost thou gain thy bread. Dryden.
No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.
2. [Prostituta, Lat.] A publick strumpet.
From every point they come,
Then dread no dearth of prostitutes at Rome. Dryden.

1. The act of setting to sale; the state of being set to sale.
2. The life of a publick strumpet.
An infamous woman, having passed her youth in a most shameless state of prostitution, now gains her livelihood by seducing others. Addison's Spectator.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostituatus, Lat.] The accent was formerly on the first syllable.
1. Lying at length.
Once I saw with dread oppressed
Her whom I dread; so that with prostitute lying,
Her length the earth in love's chief cloathing dressed. Steu.
He heard the western lords would undermine His city's wall, and lay his towers prostitute. Fairfax.
Before fair Britomart she fell prostitute. Spenser.
Groveling and prostitute on yon lake of fire. Milton.
2. Lying at mercy.
Look gracious on thy prostitute thrall.
3. Thrown down in humblest adoration.
The warning found was no sooner heard, but the churches were filled, the pavements covered with bodies prostitute, and washed with tears of devout joy. To.

PRO

Let us to the place
Repairing where he judg'd us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent; and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg. Milton.
While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind virtuous drops just gath'ring in my eye. Pope.
TO PROSTRATE. v. a. [prostratus, Lat.]
1. To lay flat; to throw down.
In the streets many they slew, and fired divers places, pro- strating two parishes almost entirely. Hayward.
A storm that all things doth prostrate,
Finding a tree alone all comfortless,
Beats on it strongly, it to ruin. Spenser.
Stake and bind up your weakest plants against the winds, before they come too fiercely, and in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Evelyn's Calendar.
The drops falling thicker, faster, and with greater force, beating down the fruit from the trees, prostrating and laying corn growing in the fields. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. [Se prosternere, Fr.] To throw down in adoration.
Some have prostrated themselves an hundred times in the day, and as often in the night. Duppa.
PROSTRATION. n. f. [prosternatio, Fr. from prosternere.]
1. The act of falling down in adoration.
Nor is only a resolved prostration unto antiquity, a powerful enemy unto knowledge, but any confident adherence unto authority. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The worship of the Gods had been kept up in temples, with altars, images, sacrifices, hymns and prostrations. Stilling.
The truths, they had subscribed to in speculation, they reverted by a brutish senseless devotion, managed with a greater prostration of reason than of body. South's Sermons.
2. Dejection; depression.
A sudden prostration of strength or weakness attends this colic. Arbutnot.
PROSTYLE. n. f. [prostyle, Fr. προστυλή.] A building that has only pillars in the front. Dict.
PROSYLOGISM. n. f. [pro and sylogism.]
A prosylogism is when two or more syllogisms are so connected together, that the conclusion of the former is the major or the minor of the following. Watts.

in their plays to hear or give the relation. Dryden.
TO PROTECT. v. a. [protectus, Lat. protector, Fr.] To defend; to cover from evil; to shield.
The king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakespeare.
Leave not the faithful side,
That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects. Milt.
Stretching his brawny arms and leafy hands,
His shade protects the plains. Dryden's Virgil.
PROTECTION. n. f. [protectio, Fr. from protecti.]
1. Defence; shelter from evil.
Drive toward Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet Both welcome and protection. Shakespeare, King Lear.
If the weak might find protection from the mighty, they could not with justice lament their condition. Swift.
2. A passport; exemption from being molested: as, he had a protection during the rebellion.
PROTECTIVE. adj. [from protecti.] Defensive; sheltering.
The stately sailing swan guards his officer's side,
Protective of his young. Thomson.
PROTECTOR. n. f. [protector, Fr. from protecti.]
1. Defender; shelterer; supporter; one who shields from evil or oppression; guardian.
Justice to crave, and succour at your court;
And then your highness, not for our's alone,
But for the world's protector shall be known. Waller.
The king of Spain, who is protector of the commonwealth, received information from the great duke. Addison.
2. An officer who had heretofore the care of the kingdom in the king's minority.
Is it concluded, he shall be protector? Shakespeare.
PROTECTOR. n. f. [protector, Fr. from protector.] A woman that protects.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness and protectors of the enterprise. Bacon.
Behold those arts with a propitious eye,
That suppliant to their great protectors fly. Addison.

lance.

PRO

TO PROTEST. v. n. [protestari, Lat. protestari, Fr.] To give a solemn declaration of opinion or resolution.
Here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for, I protest, mine never shall. Shakespeare.
The peaking cornuto comes in the instant, after we had protested and spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shakespeare.
I have long lov'd her; and I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doating obsequence. Shakespeare.
He protests against your votes, and swears
He'll not be try'd by any but his peers. Denham.
The conscience has power to disapprove and to protest against the exorbitances of the passions. South.
TO PROTEST. v. a.
1. To prove; to show; to give evidence of. Not used.
Many unfought youths, that even now Protest their first of manhood. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
2. To call as a witness.
Fiercely they oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar, Protesting fate supreme. Milton.
PROTEST. n. f. [from the verb.] A solemn declaration of opinion against something.
PROTESTANT. adj. [from protesti.] Belonging to protestants.
Since the spreading of the protestant religion, several nations are recovered out of their ignorance. Addison.
PROTESTANT. n. f. [protestant, Fr. from protesti.] One of those who adhere to them, who, at the beginning of the reformation, protested against the errors of the church of Rome.
This is the first example of any protestant subjects, that have taken up arms against their king a protestant. K. Charles.
PROTESTATION. n. f. [protestatio, Fr. from protesti.] A solemn declaration of resolution, fact or opinion.
He maketh protestation to them of Corinth, that the gospel did not by other means prevail with them, than with others the same gospel taught by the rest of the apostles. Hooker.
But to your protestation; let me hear What you profess. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, some nobleman published a protestation against it. Clarend.
I smiled at the solemn protestation of the poet in the first page, that he believes neither in the fates or destinies. Addison.
PROTESTER. n. f. [from protesti.] One who protests; one who utters a solemn declaration.
Did I use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester? Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
What if he were one of the latest protesters against popery?
and but one among many, that set about the same work? Att.
PROTHONOTARY. n. f. [protonotaire, Fr. protonotarius, Lat.] The head register.
Salignicus, the pope's prothonotary, denies the Nubians professing of obedience to the bishop of Rome. Barrwood.
PROTHONOTARIUS. n. f. [from prothonotary.] The office or dignity of the principal register.
He had the prothonotaryship of the chancery. Carew.
PROTOCOL. n. f. [protocol, Dutch; protocole, Fr. πρωτοκολλον, from πρωτος and κολλω.] The original copy of any writing.
An original is filed the protocol, or scriptura matrix; and if the protocol, which is the root and foundation of the instrument, does not appear, the instrument is not valid. Ayliffe.
PROTOMARTYR. n. f. [πρωτομάρτυρ and μαρτυρ.] The first martyr.
A term applied to St. Stephen.
PROTOPLAST. n. f. [πρωτοπλαστής and πλαστής.] Original; thing first formed as a copy to be followed afterwards.
The consumption was the primitive disease, which put a period to our protoplasts, Adam and Eve. Harvey.
PROTOTYPE. n. f. [prototype, Fr. πρωτότυπον.] The original of a copy; exemplar; archetype.
Man is the prototype of all exact symmetry. Watson.
The image and prototype were two distinct things; and therefore what belonged to the exemplar could not be attributed to the image. Stillingfleet.
TO PROTRACT. v. a. [protractus, Lat.] To draw out;
to delay; to lengthen; to spin to length.
Where can they get victuals to support such a multitude,
if we do but protract the war. Knolles.
He shrives this woman to her smock;
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech. Shakespeare.
PROTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.] Tedious continuance.
Since I did leave the presence of my love,
Many long weary days I have out-worn,
And many nights, that slowly seem'd to move
Their sad protract from evening until morn. Spenser.
PROTRACTER. n. f. [from protracti.]
1. One who draws out any thing to tedious length.
2. A mathematical instrument for taking and measuring angles.
PROTRACTOR. n. f. [from protracti.] The act of drawing to length.
Those delays
And long protraction, which he must endure, Betrays the opportunity. Daniel.
As to the fabulous protractions of the age of the world by the Egyptians, they are uncertain idle traditions. Hale.
PROTRACTIVE.

PRO

PROTRACTIVE, adj. [from protract.] Dilatory; delaying; spinning to length.
Our works are nought else
But the protractiv trials of great Jove;
To find perflivous constancy in men.
He suffer'd their protractiv arts,
And strove by mildness to reduce their hearts.
PROTREPICAL, adj. [from protrepis.] Hortatory; suatory.
The means used are partly didactical and protrepical; demonstrating the truths of the gospel, and then urging the professors to be steadfast in the faith, and beware of infidelity.
PROTRUDE, v. a. [from protrudo, Lat.] To thrust forward.
When the stomach has performed its office upon the food, it protrudes it into the guts, by whose peristaltick motion it is gently conveyed along.
They were not left, upon the sea's being protruded forwards, and constrained to fall off from certain coasts by the mud or earth, which is discharged into it by rivers.
By slow degrees,
High as the hills protrude the swelling vales.
His left arm extended, and fore finger protruded.
PROTRUDE, v. n. To thrust itself forward.
If the spirits be not merely detain'd, but protrude a little, and that motion be confus'd, there followeth putrefaction.
PROTRUSION, n. f. [from protrusio, Lat.] The act of thrusting forward; thrust; push.
To conceive this in bodies inflexible, and without all protrusion of parts, were to expect a race from Hercules his pillars.
One can have the idea of one body moved, whilst others are at rest; then the place, it deserted, gives us the idea of pure space without solidity, whereinto another body may enter, without either resistance or protrusion of any thing.
PROTUBERANCE, n. f. [from protuberans, Lat.] Something swelling above the rest; prominence; tumour.
If the world were eternal, by the continual fall and wearing of waters, all the protuberances of the earth would infinite ages since have been levelled, and the superficies of the earth rendered plain.
Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth.
PROTUBERANT, adj. [from protuberans.] Swelling; prominent.
One man's eyes are more protuberant and swelling out, another's more sunk and depressed.
Though the eye seems round, in reality the iris is protuberant above the white, else the eye could not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view.
PROTUBERATE, v. n. [from protuberans, Lat.] To swell forward; to swell out beyond the parts adjacent.
If the navel protuberates, make a small puncture with a lancet through the skin, and the waters will be voided without any danger of a hernia succeeding.
PROUD, adj. [from probo or probo, Lat.]
1. The proudest admirer of his own parts might find it useful to consult with others, though of inferior capacity.
2. Elated; valuing himself. With of before the object.
Fortune, that with malicious joy,
Does man her slave oppress,
Proud of her office to destroy,
Is seldom pleas'd to bless.
In vain of pompous chaffity you're proud,
Virtue's adultery of the tongue, when loud.
High as the mother of the gods in place,
And proud, like her, of an immortal race.
3. Arrogant; haughty; impatient.
The patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.
A foe so proud will not the weaker seek.
4. Daring; presumptuous.
By his understanding he smiteth through the proud.
The blood foretold the giant's fall,
By this proud Palmer's hand.
The proud attempt thou hast repell'd.
Proud Sparta with their wheels rebounds.
5. Lofly of men; grand of person.
He like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on.
6. Grand; lofty; splendid; magnificent.
So much is true, that the said country of Atlantis, as well as that of Peru, then called Coya, as that of Mexico, then named Tyrambel, were mighty and proud kingdoms in arms, shipping and riches.
City and great feat.
Storms of stones from the proud temple's height
Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight.
The palace built by Pegasus and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars.
7. Ostentatious; specious; grand.
I better brook the loss of brittle life,
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me.

PRO

8. Salacious; eager for the male.
That camphire begets in men an impotency unto venery, observation will hardly confirm, and we have found it fail in cocks and hens, which was a more favourable trial than that of Scaliger, when he gave it unto a bitch that was proud.
9. [Pyrexia, Sax. is swelling.] Fungous; exuberant.
When the vessels are too lax, and do not sufficiently resist the influx of the liquid, that begets a fungus or proud flesh.
This eminence is composed of little points, called fungus or proud flesh.
PROUDLY, adv. [from provid.] Arrogantly; ostentatiously; in a proud manner.
He bears himself more proudly
Even to my person, than I thought he would.
Between her white wings mantling proudly rows.
Ancus follows with a tawny air;
But vain within, and proudly popular.
Proudly he marches on, and void of fear;
Vain insolence.
PROVE, v. a. [from probo, Lat. proverbum, Fr.]
1. To evince; to show by argument or testimony.
Let the trumpet found,
If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge; I'll prove it on thy heart.
So both their deeds compar'd this day shall prove.
Smile on me, and I will prove.
Wonder is shorter liv'd than love.
If it prove any thing, it can only prove against our author, that the assignment of dominion to the eldest is not by divine institution.
In spite of Luther's declaration, he will prove the tenet upon him.
2. To try; to bring to the test.
Wilt thou thy idle rage by reason prove?
Or speak those thoughts, which have no power to move?
Thy overpraising leaves in doubt
The virtue of that fruit, in thee first prov'd.
3. To experience.
Delay not the present, but Filling the air with swords advanc'd, and darts,
We prove this very hour.
Could sense make Marius fit unbound, and prove
The cruel lancing of the knotty gout.
Well I defy'd Evadne's scorn to prove,
That to ambition sacrific'd my love.
Let him in arms the pow'r of Turnus prove,
And learn to learn whom he disdain'd to love.
PROVE, v. n.
1. To make trial.
Children prove, whether they can rub upon the breast with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another.
The fons prepare
Meeting like winds broke loose upon the main,
To prove by arms whose fate it was to reign.
2. To be found by experience.
Prove true, imagination; oh, prove true,
That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you.
All esculent and garden herbs, set upon the tops of hills, will prove more medicinal, though less esculent.
3. To succeed.
If the experiment proved not, it might be pretended, that the beasts were not killed in the due time.
4. To be found in the event.
The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed,
And those pearls of dew she wears,
Prove to be prefiguring tears.
The beauties which adorn'd that age,
The shining subjects of his rage;
Hoping they should immortal prove,
Rewarded with success in love.
When the inflammation ends in a gangrene, the case proves mortal.
Property, you see it alter,
Or in a mortgage prove a lawyer's share,
Or in a jointure vanish from the heir.
PROVEABLE, adj. [from probo.] That may be proved.
PROVEDITOR, n. f. [from providitor, Italian.] One who undertakes to procure supplies for an army.
The Jews, in those ages, had the office of proveditor.
PROVENDER, n. f. [from providens, Dutch; providens, Fr.] Dry food for brutes; hay and corn.
Good provender labouring horses would have.
I do appoint him store of provender;
It is a creature that I teach to fight.
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender.

PRO

Whene'er he chanc'd his hands to lay
On magazines of corn or hay,
Gold ready coin'd appear'd, instead
Of poultry provender and bread.
For a fortnight before you kill them, fed them with hay or other provender.
PROVERB, n. f. [from proverbe, Fr. proverbium, Lat.]
1. A short sentence frequently repeated by the people; a saw; an adage.
The sum of his whole book of proverbs is an exhortation to the study of this practical wisdom.
It is in praise and commendation of men, as it is in gettings and gains; for the proverb is true, that light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then.
The Italian proverb says of the Genoese, that they have a sea without fish, land without trees, and men without faith.
2. A word, name or observation commonly received or uttered.
Thou hast delivered us for a spoil, and a proverb of reproach.
PROVERB, v. a. [from the noun.] Not a good word.
1. To mention in a proverb.
Am I not sung and proverb'd for a fool
In every street; do they not say, how well
Are come upon him his gains?
2. To provide with a proverb.
Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless ruffles with their heels:
For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase;
I'll be a candle-holder and look on.
PROVERBIAL, adj. [from proverbial, Fr. from proverb.]
1. Mentioned in a proverb.
In case of excesses, I take the German proverbial cure, by a hair of the lame beast, to be the worst in the world; and the best, the monks diet, to eat till you are sick, and fast till you are well again.

PROVIDENCE, n. f. [from providencia, Lat.]
1. Foresight; timely care; forecast; the act of providing.
The only people, which as by their justice and providence give neither cause nor hope to their neighbours to annoy them, so are they not stirred with false praise to trouble others quiet.
Providence for war is the best prevention of it.
An established character spreads the influence of such as move in a high sphere, on all around; it reaches farther than their own care and providence can do.
2. The care of God over created beings; divine superintendence.
This appointeth unto them their kinds of working, the disposition whereof, in the purity of God's own knowledge, is rightly termed providence.
Is it not an evident sign of his wonderful providence over us, when that food of eternal life, upon the utter want whereof our endless destruction ensueth, is prepared and always set in such a readiness.
Eternal providence exceeding thought,
Where none appears can make herself away.
Providence is an intellectual knowledge, both foreseeing, caring for, and ordering all things, and doth not only behold all past, all present, and all to come; but is the cause of their so being, which preference is not.
The world was all before them, where to chuse
Their place of rest, and providence their guide.
They could not move me from my settled faith in God and his providence.
3. Prudence; frugality; reasonable and moderate care of expence.
By thrift my sinking fortune to repair,
Though late, yet is at last become my care;
My heart shall be my own, my vast expence
Reduc'd to bounds, by timely providence.
PROVIDENT, adj. [from providens, Lat.] Forecaring; cautious; prudent with respect to futurity.
I saw your brother
Most provident in peril, bind himself
To a strong mast that liv'd upon the sea.

PROV, adj. Valiant. Spenser.

PROV, n. f. [from prova, Italian; prova, Fr.] Bravery; valour; military gallantry.

Men of such prov, as not to know fear in themselves, and yet to teach it in others that should deal with them; for they had often made their lives triumph over most terrible dangers, never dimm'd, and ever fortunate. Sidney.

I hope
That your wisdom will direct my thought,
Or that your prov can me yield relief. Pa. Queen.
By heav'n's mere grace, not by our prov done. F. 2u.

Henry the fifth,
By his prov conquered all France. Shakefp.
Nor should thy prov want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shewn in treason. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Those are they
First seen in acts of prov eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void. Milton.
These beyond compare of mortal prov. Milton.
Michael of celestial armies prince;
And thou in military prov next,
Gabriel! Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

The vigour of this arm was never vain,
And that my wonted prov I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter on the plain. Dryden.

Do arm yourself against that day them to confound. F. 2.
2. Brave; valiant. The fairest of her sex, Angelica,
His daughter, fought by many prov knights. Milton.

TO PROWL, v. a. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: the old dictionaries write prole, which the dreamer Cogitation derives from prole, ready, quick. Skinner, a far more judicious etymologist, deduces it from prole, a diminutive formed by himself from prole, to prey, Fr. perhaps it may be formed, by accidental corruption, from prole.] To rove over.

He prows each place, still in new colours deckt,
Sucking one's ill, another to infect. Sidney.
TO PROWL, v. n. To wander for prey; to prey; to plunder.

The champion robbeth by night,
And proweleth and filcheth by day. Tusser.
Nor do they bear so quietly the loss of some parcels confiscated abroad, as the great detriment which they suffer by some proweleth vice-admiral or publick minister. Raleigh.

As when a proweleth wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey. Milton.
Shall he, who looks erect on heav'n,
E'er stoop to mingle with the proweleth herd,
And dip his tongue in gore. Thomson.
And here the fell attorney prows for prey. Anon.

PROWLER, n. f. [from prowl.] One that roves about for prey.

On churchyards drear,
The disappointed prower falls, and dig
The shroud body from the grave. Thomson.

PROXIMATE, adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next in the series of ratiocination; near and immediate: opposed to remote and mediate.

Writing a theory of the deluge, we were to shew the proximate natural causes of it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Substance is the remote genus of bird, because it agrees not only to all kinds of animals, but also to things inanimate; but animal is the proximate or nearest genus of bird, because it agrees to fewest other things. Watts's Logick.

PRU

PROXIMATELY, adv. [from proximate.] Immediately; without intervention.

The consideration of our mind, which is incorporeal, and the contemplation of our bodies, which have all the characters of excellent contrivance; these alone easily and proximately guide us to the wise author of all things. Bentley.

PROXIME, adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next; immediate.

A syllogism is made up of three propositions, and these of three terms variously joined: the three terms are called the remote matter of a syllogism, the three propositions the proxime or immediate matter of it. Watts's Logick.

PROXIMITY, n. f. [from proximitas, Fr. proximitas, from proximus, Lat.] Nearness.

When kingdoms have customably been carried by right of succession, according to proximity of blood; the violation of this course hath always been dangerous. Hayward.

If he plead proximity of blood,
That empty title is with ease withstood. Dryden.
Add the convenience of the situation of the eye, in respect of its proximity to the brain, the seat of common sense. Ray.
I can call to my assistance

Proximity, mark that! and distance. Prior.
Must we send to stab or poison all the popish princes, who have any pretended title to our crown by the proximity of blood? Swift's Miscellanies.

PROXY, n. f. [By contraction from procurator.]

1. The agency of another.
2. The substitution of another; the agency of a substitute; appearance of a representative. None acts a friend by a deputy, or can be familiar by proxy. South's Sermons.
Had Hyde thus sat by proxy too,
As Venus once was laid to do,
The painter must have search'd the skies,
To match the lustre of her eyes. Granville.
3. The person substituted or deputed. A wife man will commit no business of importance to a proxy, where he may do it himself. L'Estrange.

PRUCE, n. f. [Pruce is the old name for Prussia.] Prussian leather.

into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.
Search well
Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape, Left hid in some th' arch hypocrite escape. Dryden.
I wak'd, and looking round the bow'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r,
If any where by chance I might esp'y
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
Actions are of to mixt a nature, that as men pry into them, or observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them. Addison.

PUB

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying? Addison.
PSALM, n. f. [psalm, psalme, Fr. psalmos.] A holy song.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Sternhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.
Those just spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms
Singing continually. Milton.
In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
PSALMIST, n. f. [psalmiste, Fr. from psalm.] Writer of holy songs.
How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the Pagans scheme in Virgil, where one deity is represented as raising a storm, and another as laying it? Addison.
PSALMODY, n. f. [psalmodie, Fr. psalmodia.] The act or practice of singing holy songs.
PSALMOGRAPHY, n. f. [psalmos and γραφω.] The act of writing psalms.
PSALTER, n. f. [psalter, Fr. psalterium.] The volume of psalms; a psalmbook.
PSALTERY, n. f. A kind of harp beaten with sticks.
The trumpets, sacbuts, psalteries and fifes
Make the fun dance. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Praise with trumpets, pierce the skies,
Praise with harps and psalteries. Sandys's Paraph.
The sweet finger of Israel with his psaltery, loudly refounded
the benefits of the almighty creator. Peacham.
Nought shall the psaltery and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
PSEUDO, n. f. [from ψευδς.] A prefix, which, being put before words, signifies false or counterfeit: as, pseudopollis, a counterfeit apollis.
PSEUDOGRAPHY, n. f. False writing.
I will not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but shew of how great concern the emphasis were, if rightly used. Hall.
PSEUDOLOGY, n. f. [ψευδολογια.] Falsehood of speech.
It is not according to the found rules of pseudology, to report of a pious prince, that he neglects his devotion, but you may report of a merciful prince, that he has pardoned a criminal who did not deserve it. Arbuthnot.
PSHAU, interj. An expression of contempt.
A peevish fellow has some reason for being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all with pithes and pschaws. Spectator, N° 438.
PTISAN, n. f. [ptisane, Fr. πτισανη.] A medical drink made of barley decocted with raisins and liquorice.
Thrice happy were those golden days of old,
When dear as Burgundy the ptisans fold;
When patients chose to die with better will,
Than breathe and pay the apothecary's bill. Garth.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisans and cream of barley. Arbuthnot.
PTYALISM, n. f. [ptyalismos, Fr. πτελισμος.] Salivation; effusion of spittle.
PTYSMAGOGUE, n. f. [πτισμαζω and γωγω.] A medicine which discharges spittle. DiD.
PUBERTY, n. f. [puberté, Fr. pubertas, Lat.] The time of life in which the two sexes begin first to be acquainted.
The cause of changing the voice at the years of puberty seemeth to be, for that when much of the moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels, it leaveth the body more hot than it was, whence cometh the dilatation of the pipes. Bacon.
All the carnivorous animals would have multiplied exceedingly, before these children that escaped could come to the age of puberty. Bentley's Sermon.
PUBESCENCE, n. f. [from pubesco, Lat.] The state of arriving at puberty.
Solon divided it into ten septenaries; in the first is deden-tation or falling of teeth, in the second pubescence. Brown.
PUBESCENT, adj. [from pubescens, Lat.] Arriving at puberty.
That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
PUBLICAN, n. f. [from publicus, Lat.]
1. A toll gatherer.
As Jesus sat at meat, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him. Math. ix. 10.
2. A man that keeps a house of general entertainment. In low language.
PUBLICATION, n. f. [publico, Lat.]
1. The act of publishing; the act of notifying to the world;
divulgation; proclamation.
For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary, that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excellency termed preaching. Hooker.
2. Edition;

PUB

2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.
An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookseller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.
The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.
PUBLICK, adj. [public, publique, Fr. publicus, Lat.]
1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private.
By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
Born only to be victims of the state;
Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Granvil.
Have we not able counsellors, hourly watching over the publick weal. Swift.
2. Open; notorious; generally known.
Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matth.
3. General; done by many.
A dismal universal his, the sound
Of publick scorn. Milton.
4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.
They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, so they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.
All nations that grew great out of little or nothing, did so merely by the publick mindedness of particular persons. South.
A good magistrate must be endued with a publick spirit, that is with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all selfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Asterbury.
5. Open for general entertainment.
The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.
PUBLICK, n. f. [from publicus, Lat. le publicus, Fr.]
1. The general body of mankind, or of a state or nation; the people.
The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Add.
2. Open view; general notice.
Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fashion. Locke.
In private grief, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
In publick 'tis they hide,
Where none distinguish. Pope.
PUBLICKLY, adv. [from publick.]
1. In the name of the community.
This has been so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are publickly offered for its supply. Addison.
2. Openly; without concealment.
Sometimes also it may be private, communicating to the judges some things not fit to be publickly delivered. Bacon.
PUBLICKNESS, n. f. [from publick.]
1. State of belonging to the community.
The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.
2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.
PUBLICKSPIRITED, adj. [publick and spirit.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.
'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publickspirited motions in the conception. L'Estrange.
These were the publickspirited men of their age, that is,
patrons of their own interest. Dryden.
Another publickspirited project, which the common enemy could not foresee, might set king Charles on the throne. Add.
It was generous and publickspirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing, without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.
To PUBLISH, v. a. [publier, Fr. publico, Lat.]
1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.
How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have published me. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation, which he came to publish. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.
Th' unwearied fun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's pow'r display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Addison's Spectator.
2. To put forth a book into the world.
If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.
PUBLISHER, n. f. [from publish.]
1. One who makes publick or generally known.

PUD

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Shakefp.
The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Asterbury.
2. One who puts out a book into the world.
A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.
PUCE'LEGE, n. f. [French.] A state of virginity. DiD.
PUCK, n. f. [perhaps the same with pug.] Some spirit among the faeries, common in romances.
O gentle puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shakefp.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for puck is busy in these oaks,
And this is fairy ground. Corbet.
PUCKBALL or PUCKSHIT, n. f. [from puck the fairy, a fairy's ball.]
A kind of mushroom full of dust. DiD.
To PUCKER, v. a. [from puck the fairy; as aspects, from elvet; or from pock, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into corruga-tions; to contract into folds or plications.
I saw an hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spectator, N° 192.
A ligature above the part wounded is pernicious, as it puckers up the intestines, and disorders its situation. Sharp.
PUDDER, n. f. [This is commonly written pudder. See POTTER. This is most probably derived by Mr. Lye from pudder, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulent and irregular bustle.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies. Shakefp. King Lear.
What a pudder is made about essences, and how much is all knowledge pestered by the careless use of words? Locke.
To PUDDER, v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult;
to make a bustle.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from names, and setting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, puddering and confusion, which has so much hindered knowledge. Locke.
To PUDDER, v. a. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.
He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and pudder him. Locke.
PUDDING, n. f. [potten, Welsh, an intestine; boudin, French; pudding, Swedish.]
2. A kind of food very variously compounded, but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.
Sallads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian spark's guitar;
And if I take Dan Congreve right, Pudding and beef make Britons fight. Prior.
3. The gut of an animal.
He'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days; the king has kill'd his heart. Shakefp. Henry V.
As sure as his guts are made of puddings. Shakefp.
3. A bowel stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.
Mind neither good nor bad, nor right nor wrong,
But eat your pudding, slave, and hold your tongue. Prior.
PUDDINGPIE, n. f. [pudding and pie.] A pudding with meat baked in it.
Some cry the covenant, instead
Of puddingpies and gingerbread. Hudibras.
PUDDINGTIME, n. f. [pudding and time.]
1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.
2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars that still protects the stout,
In puddingtime came to his aid. Hudibras.
PUDDLE, n. f. [from puteolus, Lat. Skinner; from poil, dirt, old Bavarian, junius; hence pool.] A small muddy lake;
a dirty plash.
The Hebrews drink of the well-head, the Greeks of the fream, and the Latins of the puddle. Hall.
Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
A physician cured madmen thus; they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puddle, 'till brought to their wits. L'Estr.
Treading where the treacherous puddle lay,
His heels flew up; and on the grassy floor
He fell, beismear'd with filth. Dryden's Virgil.
Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacidity, ran through every puddle, and took care to return covered with dirt. Addison's Freeholder.
To PUDDLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to pollute with dirt; to mix dirt and water.
As if I saw my fun shine in a puddled water, I cried out of nothing but Mopla. Sidney.

Some

PUF

Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakefp. Othello.
His beard they fling'd off with brand of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him.
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Shakefp.
The noblest blood of Africk
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though derived from the same source, thy current Is puddl'd and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.
PUDDLY, adj. [from puddle.] Muddy; dirty; miry.
Limy, or thick puddly water killeth them. Carew.
PUDDOCK or PURRACK, n. f. [for puddock or parrock.] A provincial word for a small inclosure. Diæ.
PUDECY, n. f. [pudens, Lat.] Modesty; shamedness.
A pudency to rosy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn. Shakefp.

chastity. Diæ.
PUEFELOW, n. f. A partner.
This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body;
And makes her puefellow with others moan. Shakefp.
PUERILE, adj. [puerile, Fr. puerilis, Lat.] Childish; boyish.
I looked upon the mansion with a veneration mixt with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puerile amusements. Pope.
PUERILITY, n. f. [puerilité, Fr. from puerilitas, Lat.] Childishness; boyishness.
A relieve of puerility not shaken off from school. Brown.
Some men imagining themselves possessed with a divine fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puerilities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
PUR, n. f. A kind of water fowl.
Among the first fort are coots, fanderlings and puets. Car.
The fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant and the pur. Walton's Angler.
PURF, n. f. [puf, Dutch, a blast which swells the cheeks.]
1. A quick blast with the mouth.
In garret vile, he with a warming puff
Regales chill'd fingers. Philips.
2. A small blast of wind.
The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puff of wind stooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that she instantly sunk. Raleigh.
The naked breathless body lies,
To every puff of wind a slave,
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wise. Flatman.
A puff of wind blows off cap and wig. L'Estrange.
There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.
With one fierce puff he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self-discover'd infant lay. Dryden.

4. Something to sprinkle powder on the hair. Ainsworth.
TO PUFF, v. n. [puffen, Dutch.]
1. To swell the cheeks with wind.
2. To swell with a quick blast.
Wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy South puffing with wind and rain. Shakefp.
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakefp.
3. To blow with scornfulness.
Some puff at these instances, as being such as were under a different œconomy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. South's Sermons.
It is really to defy heaven, to puff at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its worst. South.
4. To breathe thick and hard.
Seld'shown flamins
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
The ais comes back again, puffing and blowing, from the chaire. L'Estrange.
A true son of the church
Came puffing with his greasy bald-pate choir,
And fumbling o'er his beads. Dryden.
5. To do or move with hurry, tumour, or tumultuous agitation.
More unconstant than the wind, who woes
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the North,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shakefp.
Then came brave glory puffing by
In filks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.
6. To swell with the wind.
A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puffing matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

PUIN

TO PUFF, v. a.
1. To swell as with wind.
Let him fall by his own greatness;
And puff him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Denham's Sophy.
Flattering of others, and boasting of ourselves, may be referred to lying; the one to please others, and puff them up with self-conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Ray on the Creation.
2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.
I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his ranks into the air,
And from his arm puff his own brother. Shakefp.
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat?
Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
When the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away.
Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue?
If they a little breath should raise,
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puff'd away the monarch's praise?
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-flander could puff away. Pope.
3. To drive with a blast of breath scornfully.
When the dances in the wind,
And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd. Dry.
4. To swell or blow up with praise.
The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of juridiction, being truly parafiti curiae, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.
5. To swell or elate with pride.
His look like a coxcombe up puffed with pride. Tupper.
This army, led by a tender prince,
Whole spirit with divine ambition puff,
Makes mouths at the invisible event. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Think not of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up one against another. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
Did not your honour, but their own advance. Dryden.
Who stands fastest; tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd posterity?
The Phœacians were so puffed up with their constant felcity, that they thought nothing impossible. Broom.
PUFFER, n. f. [from puff.] One that puffs.
PUFFIN, n. f. [puffin, Italian.]

handsomeness; quality opposite to deformity.
Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals, wherein there is an approved pulchritude. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pulchritude is conveyed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which refines it. More.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.
That there is a great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray on the Creation.
TO PULE, v. n. [pauler, Fr.]

He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in. Gen. viii. 9.
His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings xiii. 4.
Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jer. vii. 11.
They pulled away the shoulder and stopped their ears. Zech.
Ill fortune never crush'd that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends to place all things the gave them to, as the might take them from them, not pull them. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.
2. To draw forcibly.
He was not so desirous of wars, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him. Hayward.
A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots. Swift.
3. To pluck; to gather.
When bounteous Autumn rears his head,
He joys to pull the ripen'd pear. Dryden.
Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and stronger than if let stand till the seed is ripe. Mortimer.
4. To tear; to rend.
He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces;
he hath made me desolate. Lam. iii. 2.

PUL

Ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pass by securely. Mic. ii. 8.
I rent my cloaths, and pulled off the hair from off my head. 1 Esdr. viii. 71.
5. TO PULL, down. To subvert; to demolish.
Although it was judged in form of a statute, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated, and his houses pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignomy. Bacon.
In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Howel's Vocal Forest.
When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds worlds. Burn.
6. TO PULL, down. To degrade.
He begs the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
To raise the wretched, and pull down the proud. Roscom.
What title has this queen but lawless force?
And force must pull her down. Dryden.
7. TO PULL, up. To extirpate; to eradicate.
What censure, doubting thus of innate principles, I may deserve from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.
PULL, n. f. [from the verb.] The act of pulling; pluck.
This wrestling pull between Corineus and Gogmagog is reported to have befallen at Dover. Carew.
Duke of Glo'ter, scarce himself,
That bears so threw'd a main; two pulls at once;
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopt off. Shakefp.
I awak'd with a violent pull upon the ring, which was fastened at the top of my box. Gulliver's Travels.

—With eggs, Sir?
—Simple of itself; I'll no pullet sperm in my brewage. Sha.
I felt a hard tumour on the right side, the bigness of a pullet's egg. Wise's Surgery.
They died not because the pullets would not feed, but because the devil forefaw their death, he contrived that abstinence in them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PULLEY, n. f. [poullie, Fr.] A small wheel turning on a pivot, with a furrow on its outside in which a rope runs.
Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and, in three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine. Gulliver.
Here pulleys make the pond'rous oak ascend. Gay.
TO PULLULATE, v. n. [pullulo, Lat. pulluler, Fr.] To germinate; to bud.
PULMONARY, adj. [from pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small in respect of that of the heart. Arbutnot.
Cold air, by its immediate contact with the surface of the lungs, is capable of producing defluxions upon the lungs, ulcerations, and all sorts of pulmonick consumptions. Arbutnot.
PULMONARY, n. f. [pulmonaire, Fr.] The herb lungwort. Ainsf.
PULMONICK, adj. [pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
An ulcer of the lungs may be a cause of pulmonick consumption, or consumption of the lungs. Harvey.
PULP, n. f. [pulpa, Lat. pulpe, Fr.]
1. Any soft mass.
The jaw bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The soft part of fruit; the part of fruit distinct from the seeds and rind.
The favoury pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream. Milton.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seeds, it serves also by a secondary intention for the sustenance of man and other animals. Ray.
The grub
Oft unoberv'd invades the vital core,
Pernicious tenant, and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp
Cereals. Philips.
PULPIT, n. f. [pulpitum, Lat. pulpitr, pupitre, Fr.]
1. A place raised on high, where a speaker stands.
Produce his body to the market-place,
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.
2. The higher desk in the church where the sermon is pronounced; distinct from the lower desk where prayers are read.
We see on our theatres, the examples of vice rewarded, yet it ought not to be an argument against the art, any more than the impieties of the pulpit in the late rebellion. Dryden.
Sir

PUL

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit cloth, and railed in the communion table. Addison's Spectator, N^o 112.
Bishops were not wont to preach out of the pulpit. Ayliffe.
Pulpits their sacred fatyr learn'd to spare,
And vice admir'd to find a flatt'ring there. Pope.

PULPOUS, adj. [from pulp.] Soft.
The redstreak's pulpous fruit
With gold irradiate, and vermilion shines. Philips.
PULPOUSNESS, n. f. [from pulpous.] The quality of being pulpous.

PULPY, adj. [from pulp.] Soft; pappy.
In the walnut and plumbs is a thick pulpy covering, then a hard shell, within which is the seed. Ray on the Creation.
Putrefaction destroys the specifick difference of one vegetable from another, converting them into a pulpy substance of an animal nature. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PULSATION, n. f. [pulsation, Fr. pulsatio, from pulse, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choaked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.
PULSATOR, n. f. [from pulse, Lat.] A striker; a beater.
PULSE, n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; because fluids, when they are pressed, press again to all sides, and their pressure is always perpendicular to the sides of the containing vessels; but the coats of the artery, by any small impetus, may be distended: therefore, upon the contraction or systole of the heart, the blood from the left ventricle will not only press the blood in the artery forwards, but both together will distend the sides of the artery: when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart: this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; for, while the blood is thrust out of the heart into the artery, the artery being full, the blood must move in all the arteries at the same time; and because the arteries are conical, and the blood moves from the base of the cone to the apex, therefore the blood must strike against the sides of the vessels, and consequently every point of the artery must be dilated at the same time that the blood is thrown out of the left ventricle of the heart; and as soon as the elasticity of the spiral fibres can overcome the impetus of the blood, the arteries are again contracted: thus two causes operating alternately, the heart and fibres of the arteries, keep the blood in a continual motion: an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakespeare.
The prosperity of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Clarendon.

My body is from all diseases free;
My temperate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.
If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arb.
2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflexion, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.
4. [From puls.] Leguminous plants.

With Elijah he partook,
Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.
Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain!
While corn and pulse by nature are bestowed. Dryden.
Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulses. Mort.

TO PULSE, v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.

The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time. Ray.
PULSION, n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward: in opposition to suction or traction.

Admit it might use the motion of pulsions, yet it could never that of attraction. More's Divine Dialogues.

PUM

By attraction we do not here understand what is improperly called so, in the operations of drawing, sucking and pumping, which is really pulsion and trusion. Bentley.
PULVERABLE, adj. [from pulveris, Lat.] Possible to be reduced to dust.

In making the first ink, I could by filtration separate a pretty store of a black pulverable substance that remained in the fire. Boyle on Colours.
PULVERIZATION, n. f. [from pulverizatio.] The act of powdering; reduction to dust or powder.

TO PULVERIZE, v. a. [from pulveris, Lat. pulverizer, Fr.] To reduce to powder; to reduce to dust.

If the experiment be carefully made, the whole mixture will shoot into fine crystals, that seem to be of an uniform substance, and are consistent enough to be even brittle, and to endure to be pulverized and sifted. Boyle.

PULVERULENCE, n. f. [pulverulentia, Lat.] Dustiness; abundance of dust.

PULVIL, n. f. [pulvillum, Lat.] Sweet scents.

The toilette, nursery of charms,

Completely furnish'd with bright beauty's arms,

The patch, the powder-box, pulvils, perfumes. Gay.

TO PULVIL, v. a. [from the noun.] To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not think of the stable. Congreve's Way of the World.

PUMICE, n. f. [pumex, pumicis, Lat.]

The pumice is evidently a slag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, and only reduced to this state by the violent action of fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities, found in masses of different sizes and shapes, of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found in many parts of the world, but particularly about the burning mountains Etna, Vesuvius and Hecla: it is used as a dentifrice. Hill's Materia Medica.

So long I shot, that all was spent,
Though pumice stones I hastily hent,
And threw; but nought availed. Spenser.

Etna and Vesuvius, which consist upon sulphur, shoot forth smoke, ashes and pumice, but no water. Bacon.

Near the Lucrine lake,
Streams of sulphur raise a stifling heat,
And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Addison.

PUMMEL, n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP, n. f. pompe, Dutch and French.]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you pour a little water into it first. More's Antidote against Atheism.

In the framing that great ship built by Hiero, Athenues mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water though very deep. Wilkins's Dædalus.

These pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double for two. Martiner.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakespeare.
Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

Thalia's ivy shews her prerogative over comical poetry; her mask, mantle and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Peachment.

The water and sweat

Splish splash in their pumps. Swift's Miscell.

TO PUMP, v. n. [pompen, Dutch.] To work a pump; to throw out water by a pump.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

TO PUMP, v. a.

1. To raise or throw out by means of a pump.

2. To examine artfully by fly interrogatories, so as to draw out any secrets or concealments.

The one's the learned knight, seek out,
And pump them what they come about. Hudibras.

Ask him what passes

Amongst his brethren, he'll hide nothing from you;

But pump not me for politics. Orway's Venice Preserv'd.

PUMPER, n. f. [from pump.] The person or the instrument that pumps.

The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.

PUMPTION, n. f. A plant.

The flower of the pumption consists of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, expanded at the top, and cut into several segments: of these flowers some are male, and some female, as in the cucumbers and melons: the female flowers grow upon the top of the embryo, which afterwards becomes an oblong or round fleshy fruit, having sometimes an hard, rugged and uneven uneven rind, with knobs and furrows, and is often divided into three parts, inclosing flat seeds that are edged or rimmed about as it were with a ring, and fixed to a spongy placenta. Miller.

We'll use this gross watry pumption, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUN, n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced: to pun, is to grind or beat with a pestle; can pun mean an empty sound, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?] An equivocation; a quibble; an expression where a word has at once different meanings.

It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: cuniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.

But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,

Alike to them by pathos, or by pun. Pope.

TO PUN, v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.

The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggerel, or who pun'd in prose. Dryden.

You would be a better man, if you could pun like Sir

Trifram. Tatler, N^o 57.

TO PUNCH, v. a. [poinçonner, Fr.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.

When I was mortal, my anointed body

By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shakespeare.

By reason of its constitution it continued open, as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wijeman's Surgery.

Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge, you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Moxon.

The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the crucea, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray on the Creation.

PUNCH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pointed instrument, which, driven by a blow, perforates bodies.

The flank of a key the punch cannot strike, because the flank is not forged with substance sufficient; but the drill cuts a true round hole. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. [Cant word.] A liquor made by mixing spirit with water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

The West India dry gripes are occasioned by lime juice in punch. Arbutnot on Aliments.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

3. [Punchinello, Italian.] The buffoon or harlequin of the puppet-show.

Of rarefactions he sung and punch's feats. Goy.

2. A measure of liquids.

PUNCHER, n. f. [from punch.] An instrument that makes an impression or hole.

In the upper jaw are five teeth before, not incisors or cutters, but thick punchers. Grew's Microscopium.

PUNCTILIO, n. f. A small nicety of behaviour; a nice point of exactness.

Common people are much astonished, when they hear of those solemn contests which are made among the great, upon the punctilios of a public ceremony. Addison.

Punctilio is out of doors, the moment a daughter clandestinely quits her father's house. Clarissa.

PUNCTILIOUS, adj. [from punctilio.] Nice; exact; punctual to superstition.

Some depend on a punctilious observance of divine laws, which they hope will atone for the habitual transgression of the rest. Rogers's Sermons.

PUNCTILIOUSNESS, n. f. [from punctiliosus.] Nicety; exactness of behaviour.

PUNCTO, n. f. [punto, Spanish.]

1. Nice point of ceremony.

The final conquest of Granada from the Moors, king Ferdinand displayed in his letters, with all the particularities and religious punctos and ceremonies that were observed in the reception of that city and kingdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. The point in fencing.

Vat he all you come for?

— To see thee here, to see thee there, to see thee pass thy puncto. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUNCTUAL, adj. [punctualis, Fr.]

1. Comprised in a point; confiding in a point.

PUN

This earth a spot, a grain,
An atom with the firmament compar'd,
And all her number'd stars, that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible; for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

2. Exact; nice; punctilious.

A gentleman punctual of his word, when he had heard that two had agreed upon a meeting, and the one neglected his hour, would say of him, he is a young man then. Bacon.

This mistake to avoid, we must observe the punctual differences of time, and so distinguish thereof, as not to confound or lose the one in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That the women are menstruous, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Bro.

He was punctual and just in all his dealings. Arbutnot.

The correspondence of the death and sufferings of our lord is so punctual and exact, that they seem rather like a history of events past, than a prophecy of such as were to come. Rogers.

PUNCTUALITY, n. f. [from punctualis.] Nicety; scrupulous exactness.

For the encouragement of those that hereafter should serve other princes with that punctuality as Sophronio had done, he commanded him to offer him a blank, wherein he might set down his own conditions. Howell's Vocal Forest.

Though some of these punctualities did not so much conduce to preserve the text, yet all of them shew, the infinite care which was taken, that there might be no mistake in a single letter. Grew's Cosmog.

PUNCTUALLY, adv. [from punctualis.] Nicely; exactly; scrupulously.

There were no use at all for war or law, if every man had prudence to conceive how much of right were due both to and from himself, and were withal so punctually just as to perform what he knew requisite, and to rest contented with his own. Locke's Essay.

Concerning the heavenly bodies, there is so much exactness in their motions, that they punctually come to the same periods to the hundredth part of a minute. Ray on the Creation.

I freely bring what Moses hath related to the text, comparing it with things as now they stand; and finding his account to be punctually true, I fairly declare what I find. Woodward.

PUNCTUALNESS, n. f. [from punctualis.] Exactness; nicety.

The most literal translation of the scriptures, in the most natural signification of the words, is generally the best; and the same punctualness which debaseth other writings, preferreth the spirit and majesty of the sacred text. Falton.

PUNCTUATION, n. f. [punctum, Lat.] The act or method of pointing.

It ought to do it willingly, without being forced to it by any change in the words or punctuation. Addison.

PUNCTURE, n. f. [punctus, Lat.] A small prick; a hole made with a very sharp point.

With the loadstone of Laurentius Guaficus, whatsoever needles or bodies were touched, the wounds and punctures made thereby were never felt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way being cut through, they are irrecoverable; but when pricked by a sharp-pointed weapon, which kind of wound is called a puncture, they are much to be regarded. Wijeman.

TO PUNCTULATE, v. n. [punctulum, Lat.] To mark with small spots.

The studs have their surface punctulated, as if set all over with other studs infinitely lesser. Woodward.

PUNDLE, n. f. [punila & obesa, Lat.] A short and fat woman.

PUNGAR, n. f. [pungarus, Lat.] A fish. Answorth.

PUNGENCY, n. f. [from pungent.]

PUNICEOUS. adj. [puniceus, Lat.] Purple. Diast.

PUNINESS. n. f. [from puny.] Pettiness; smallness.
To PUNISH. v. a. [puniō, Lat.]

1. To chastise; to afflict with penalties or death for some crime.
Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches Are punish'd with. Shakespeare. King Lear.
If you will not hearken, I will punish you seven times more for your fins. Lev. xxvi. 18.

2. To revenge a fault with pain or death.
PUNISHABLE. adj. [punissibilis, Fr. from punire.] Worthy of punishment; capable of punishment.
Theft is naturally punishable, but the kind of punishment is positive, and such lawful, as men shall think with discretion convenient to appoint. Hosker, b. iii. f. 9.

Sith creatures, which have no understanding, can shew no will; and where no will is, there is no sin; and only that which fineth, is subject to punishment; which way should any such creature be punishable by the law of God? Hosker.

Their bribery is less punishable, when bribery opened the door by which they entered. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

PUNISHABLENESS. n. f. [from punishable.] The quality of deserving or admitting punishment.

PUNISHER. n. f. [from punire.] One who inflicts pains for a crime.
This knows my punisher; therefore as far
From granting me, as I from begging peace. Milton.

PUNISHMENT. n. f. [punishment, Fr.] Any infliction imposed in vengeance of a crime.
The house of endless pain is built thereby;
In which ten thousand fates of punishments
The curst creatures do eternally torment. Fa. Queen.

Unless it were a bloody murderer,
I never gave them condign punishment.
Thou, through the judgment of God, shalt receive just punishment for thy pride. 2 Mac. vii. 36.

Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? Job xxxi. 3.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat;
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established, as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice, against whatever pleasure or pain this life can shew. Locke.

PUNITION. n. f. [punition, Fr. punire, Lat.] Punishment. Ans.

PUNITIVE. adj. [from punio, Lat.] Awarding or inflicting punishment.
Neither is the cylinder charged with sin, whether by God or not, nor any punitive law enacted by either against its rolling down the hill. Hammond's Fundamentals.

PUNITORY. adj. [from punio, Lat.] Punishing; tending to punishment.

PUNK. n. f. A whore; a common prostitute; a strumpet.
She may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

And made them fight, like mad or drunk;
For dame religion as for punk. Hudibras.

Near these a nursery erects its head,
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry,
Where infant punks their tender voices try. Dryden.

PUNSTER. n. f. [from pun.] A quibbler; a low wit who endeavours at reputation by double meaning.
His mother was cousin to Mr. Swan, gamester and punster of London. Arbutnot and Pope.

To PUNT. v. n. To play at basset and ombre.
One is for setting up an assembly for basset, where none shall be admitted to punt, that have not taken the oaths. Add.

When a duke to Janfen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they. Pope.

PUNY. adj. [puiis, Fr.]

1. Young.
2. Inferior; petty; of an under rate.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

Know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Drive
The puny habitants; or if not drive,
Seduce them to our party. Milton.

PUP

This friendship is of that strength, as to remain unshaken by such assaults, which yet are strong enough to shake down and annihilate the friendship of little puny minds. South.

Jove at their head ascending from the sea;
A shoal of puny powers attend his way. Dryden.

PUNY. n. f. A young unexperienced unseasoned wretch.
Tenderness of heart makes a man but a puny in this life;
it spoils the growth, and cramps the crowning exploits of this vice. South's Sermons.

To PUP. v. n. [from puppy.] To bring forth whelps; used of a bitch bringing young.

PUPIL. n. f. [pupilla, Lat.]

1. The apple of the eye.
Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and let before us, till the pupils of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray on the Creation.

The uvea has a muculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. Moor.

The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses. Newton's Opticks.

2. [Pupille, Fr. pupillus, Lat.] A scholar; one under the care of a tutor.
My master fues to her, and she hath taught her tutor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shakespeare.

One of my father's servants,
With store of tears this treason 'gan unfold,
And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Fairfax.

If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath for great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Raleigh.

Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Estr.

The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

3. A ward; one under the care of his guardian.
Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles,
What are the grounds
To undertake to young so vast a care? Dryden.

So some weak fool, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupil soft'ning juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flows to blow. Tidd.

PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]

1. State of being a scholar.
The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.

2. Wardship; minority.
Three sons he dying left, all under age;
By means whereof their uncle Vortigern
Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;
Which the infant's tutors gathering to fear,
Them closely into Armoric did bear. Piercy's Quest.

PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaris, Fr. pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.]
Pertaining to a pupil or ward.

PUPPET. n. f. [puppee, Fr. pupus, Lat.]

1. A small image moved by men in a mock drama; a wooden tragedian.
Once Zelmane could not stir; but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion stood only upon her pleasure, Basilus with servicable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney, b. ii.

Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets.
His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and complaisance; as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance. Pope.

In flood impotence he speaks;
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

2. A word of contempt.
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn
In Rome as well as I. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet!
PUPPETMAN. n. f. [puppet and man.] Master of a puppet-show.
Why is a handsome wife ador'd
By every coxcomb but her lord?
From yonder puppetman inquire,
Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.

PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.] A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.
Tim, you have a taste I know,
And often see a puppetshow.
To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow. Arbutnot and Pope.

PUR

A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the fight of a puppetshow. Pope.

PUR. n. f. [pupus, Fr.]

1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.
He Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. Shakespeare.

The rogues lighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen in the litter. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The how to the bitch says, your puppies are all blind. L'Estr.

Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,
Till the bright sun has nine times set and rose. Gay.

2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.
I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster;
a most scurvy monster! Shakespeare. Tempest.

Thus much I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out.
I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm. Addison's Guardian.

To PURRY. v. r. [from the noun.] To bring whelps.
PURBLIND. adj. [corrupted from poreblind, which is still used in Scotland; pore and blind.] Nearighted; shortsighted.
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname to her purblind son and heir.
The truth appears fo naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare.

'Tis known to several
Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes
Perchance, are to this business purblind. Shakespeare.

Like to purblind moles, no greater light than that little which they shun. Drummond.

Darkness, that here surrounded our purblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day. Boyle.

Dropt in clear thick-sighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, though purblind in the light. Hudibras.

Purblind man
Sees but a part of th' chain, the nearest links;
His eyes not carrying to that equal beam,
That shines all above. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

PURBLINDNESS. n. f. [from purblind.] Shortness of sight.

PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.] That may be purchased or bought.
Money being the counterbalance to all things purchasable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, to much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.

To PURCHASE. v. a. [purchase, Fr.]

1. To buy for a price.
You have many a purchas'd slave,
Which like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part.
His sons buried him in the cave, which Abraham purchas'd of the sons of Hebr. Shakespeare. Gen. xxv.

2. To obtain at any expence, as of labour or danger.
A world who would not purchase with a bruise. Milton.

3. To expiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses,
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

PURCHASE. n. f. [purchase, old Fr. from the verb.]

1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.
He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke on Education.

Our thriving dean has purchas'd land;
A purchase which will bring him clear
Above his rent four pounds a year. Swift.

2. Any thing of which possession is taken.
A beauty waiting and distressed widow Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakespeare.

The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his stores; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Estrange.

PURCHASER. n. f. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.
Upon one only alienation and change, the purchaser is to pass both licence, fine and recovery. Bacon.

So unhappy have been the purchasers of church lands, that, though in such purchases, men have usually the cheapest penny-worth, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.

Most of the old statutes may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners, than they are to a modern purchaser. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

PURE. adj. [pur, pure, Fr. purus, Lat.]

1. Not filthy; not sullied.
There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness. Prov. xxx. 12.

2. Clear; not dirty; not muddy.
Thou purg'd stone, whose pureness doth present
My purest mind. Sidney, b. ii.

PUR

3. Unmingled; not altered by mixtures; mere.
What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is hated to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much a kin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts's Logic.

4. Not connected with any thing extrinsic: as, pure mathematics.
Mathematicks in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed; and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Wilkins.

When a proposition expresses that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition; as every true christian is an honest man. Watts.

5. Free; clear.
His mind of evil pure
Supports him, and intention free from fraud. Philips.

6. Free from guilt; guiltless; innocent.
Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Prov. xx. 9.

O welcome pure ey'd faith,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
No hand of strife is pure, but that which wins. Milton.

7. Incurrupt; not vitiated by any bad practice or opinion.
Her guiltless glory just Britannia draws From pure religion, and impartial laws. Daniel.

8. Not vitiated with corrupt modes of speech.
As oft as I read those comedies, so oft doth found in mine ear the pure fine talk of Rome. Tidd.

9. Mere: as, a pure villain, purus patus nebulo, Lat.
The lord of the castle was a young man of spirit, but had lately out of pure weariness of the fatigue, and having spent most of his money, left the king. Clarendon.

There happened a bloody civil war among the hawks, when the peaceable pigeons, in pure pity and good nature, send their mediators to make them friends again. L'Estrange's Fables.

10. Chaste; modest.
PURELY. adv. [from pure.]

1. In a pure manner; not dirtily; not with mixture.
I will purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy filth. Isaiah i. 25.

2. Innocently; without guilt.

3. Merely.
The being able to raise an army, and conducting it to fight against the king, was purely due to him, and the effect of his power. Clarendon, b. viii.

Upon the particular observations on the metallick and mineral bodies, I have not founded any thing but what purely and immediately concerns the natural history of those bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

I converse in full freedom with men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as having made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

PURENESS. n. f. [from pure.]

1. Clearness; freedom from extraneous or foul admixtures.
They came to the river side, which of all the rivers of Greece had the prize for excellent pureness and sweetness, in so much as the very bathing in it was accounted exceeding healthful. Sidney.

No circumstances are like to contribute more to the advancement of learning, than exact temperance, great pure-ness of air, equality of climate, and long tranquility of government. Temple.

2. Simplicity; exemption from composition.
An essence eternal and spiritual, of absolute pureness and simplicity. Raleigh.

My love was such,
It could, though he supply'd no fuel, burn;
Rich in itself, like elemental fire,
Whole pureness does no aliment require. Dryden.

3. Innocence; freedom from guilt.
May we evermore serve thee in holiness and pureness of living. Common Prayer.

4. Freedom from vicious modes of speech.
In all this good propriety of words, and pureness of phrases in Terence, you must not follow him always in placing of them. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

PURFILE. n. f. [purfile, Fr.] A sort of ancient trimming for women's gowns, made of tincl and thread; called also bobbin work. Bailey.

Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakefp.
Iris there with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingled hew,
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same, and purpled o'er With diamonds. Dryden.
PURPLE. n. f. [purpille, Fr. from the verb.] A border of PURPLEW. s. embroidery.
PURGATION. n. f. [purgatio, Fr. purgatio, Lat.]
1. The act of cleansing or purifying from vitious mixtures.
We do not suppose the separation finished, before the purga- tion of the air began. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. The act of cleansing the body by downward evacuation.
Let the physician apply himself more to purgation than to alteration, because the offence is in quantity. Bacon.
3. The act of clearing from imputation of guilt.
If any man doubt, let him put me to my purgation. Shak.
Even to the guilt or the purgation. Shakefp.
PURGATIVE. adj. [purgativus, Fr. purgativus, Lat.] Cathartic; having the power to cause evacuations downward.
Purging medicines have their purgative virtue in a fine spirit, they endure not boiling without loss of virtue. Bacon.
All that is fill'd, and all that which doth fill
All the round world, to man is but a pill;
In all it works not, but it is in all Poisonous, or purgative, or cordial. Donne.
Lenient purgatives evacuate the humours. Wifeman.
PURGATORY. n. f. [purgatorium, Fr. purgatorium, Lat.] A place in which souls are supposed by the papists to be purged by fire from carnal impurities, before they are received into heaven.
Thou thy folk, through pains of purgatory,
Dost bear unto thy bliss. Spenser's Hymn on Love.
In this age, there may be as great instances produced of real charity, as when men thought to get souls out of purga- tory. Stillington.
To PURGE. v. a. [purger, Fr. purge, Lat.]
1. To cleanse; to clear.
It will be like that labour of Hercules, in purging the stable of Augeas, to separate from superfluous observations any thing that is clean and pure natural. Bacon.
2. To clear from impurities.
To the English court assemblable now
From every region apes of idleness;
Now neighbour confines purge you of your scum. Shakefp.
Air ventilates and cools the mines, and purges and frees them from mineral exhalations. Woodward.
3. To clear from guilt.
Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time
Ere human statute purged the gen'ral weal. Shakefp.
My soul is purged from grudging hate;
And with my hand I feel my true heart's love. Shakefp.
The blood of Christ shall purge our conscience from dead works to serve God. Heb. ix. 14.
Syphax, we'll join our cares to purge away
Our country's crimes, and clear her reputation. Addison.
4. To clear from imputation of guilt.
He, I accuse,
Intends t' appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Marquis Dorset was hasting towards him, to purge himself of some accusation. Bacon's Henry VII.

ings, is a principal means of a prolongation of life. Bacon.
If he was not cured, he purged him with salt water. Arbutnot.
7. To clarify; to defecate.
To PURGE. v. n. To have frequent stools.
PURGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A cathartic medicine; a medicine that evacuates the body by stool.
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us. Shakefp.
Pills nor laxatives I like;
Of those his gain the sharp physician makes,
And often gives a purge, but seldom takes. Dryden.
He was no great friend to purging and clifters; he was for mixing aloes with small purges. Arbutnot.
PURGER. n. f. [from purge.]
1. One who clears away any thing noxious.

PUR

This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious;
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers. Shakefp.
2. Purge; cathartic.
It is of good use in physick, if you can retain the purging virtue, and take away the unpleasant taste of the purger. Bac.
PURIFICATION. n. f. [purificatio, Fr. purificatio, Lat.]
1. The act of making pure; act of cleansing from extraneous mixture.
I discerned a considerable difference in the operations of feveral kinds of saltpetre, even after purification. Boyle.
2. The act of cleansing from guilt.
The sacraments, in their own nature, are just such as they seem, water, and bread, and wine; but because they are made signs of a secret mystery, and water is the symbol of purification of the soul from sin, and bread and wine, of Christ's body and blood; therefore the symbols receive the names of what they sign. Taylor's Worshy Communicant.
3. A rite performed by the Hebrews after childbearing.
PURIFICATORY. adj. [purificatus, Fr. purificatus, Lat.]
PURIFICATORY. s. dency to make pure.

1. To make pure.
2. To free from any extraneous admixture.
If any bad blood should be left in the kingdom, an honourable foreign war will vent or purify it. Bacon's Henry VII.
The mass of the air was many thousand times greater than the water, and would in proportion require a greater time to be purified. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
By chase our long-liv'd fathers earn'd their food,
Toil frugate the nerves, and purified the blood. Dryden.
3. To make clear.
It ran upon to fine and delicate a ground, as one could not easily judge, whether the river did more wash the gravel, or the gravel did purify the river. Sidney, b. ii.
4. To free from guilt or corruption.
He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people. Tit. ii. 14.
If God gives grace, knowledge will not stay long behind;
since it is the same spirit and principle that purifies the heart, and clarifies the understanding. South's Sermon.
5. To free from pollution, as by lustration.
There were set six water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews. Jn. ii. 6.
6. To clear from barbarisms or improprieties.
He saw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sprat.
To PURIFY. v. n. To grow pure.
We do not suppose the separation of these two liquors wholly finished, before the purification of the air began, though let them begin to purify at the same time. Burnet.
PURIST. n. f. [puriste, Fr.] One superstitiously nice in the use of words.
PURITAN. n. f. [from pure.] A sectary pretending to eminent purity of religion.
The schism which the papists on the one hand, and the superstition which the puritan on the other, lay to our charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves. Sanderfon.
PURITANICAL. adj. [from puritan.] Relating to puritans.
Such guides set over the several congregations will mislead them, by infilling into them puritanical and superstitious principles, that they may the more securely exercise their prebyterian tyranny. Walton.
PURITANISM. n. f. [from puritan.] The notions of a puritan.
A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me. Walton.
PURITY. n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]

Her urn
Pours streams select, and purity of waters. Prior.
From the body's purity, the mind Receives a secret aid. Thomson's Summer.
2. Freedom from guilt; innocence.
Death lets us safely on shore in our long-expected Canaan, where there are no temptations, no danger of falling, but eternal purity and immortal joys secure our innocence and happines for ever. Wake's Preparation for Death.
3. Chastity; freedom from contamination of sexes.
Could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and her marriage vow. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
PURUL. n. f. [this is justly supposed by Minerva to be contracted from purile.]
1. An embroidered and puckered border.
Himself came in next after a triumphant chariot made of carnation velvet, enriched with purle and pearl. Sidney.
The jagging of pinks is like the inequality of oak leaves;
but they seldom have any small purle. Bacon.
2. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of medicated male liquors, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused.
To PURL.

PUR

To PURL. v. n. [of this word it is doubtful what is the primitive signification; if it is referred originally to the appearance of a quick stream, which is always dimpled on the surface, it may come from purle, a pucker or fringe; but if, as the use of authors seem to show, it relates to the sound, it must be derived from perle, Swedish, to murmur, according to Mr. Lye.] To murmur; to flow with a gentle noise.
Tones are not so apt to procure sleep, as some other sounds;
as the wind, the purle of water, and humming of bees.
Instruments that have returns, as trumpets; or flexions, as cornets; or are drawn up, and put from, as sacbuts, have a purle sound; but the recorder or flute, that have none of these inequalities, give a clear sound. Bacon.
All fish from sea or shore,
Fretted, or purle brook, or shell or fin. Milton.
My flow'ry theme,
A painted mistress, or a purle stream. Pope.
Around th' adjoining brook, that purle along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock. Thomson.
To PURL. v. a. To decorate with fringe or embroidery.
When was old Sherwood's head more quaintly curl'd,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and *purle*d. B. Johnson.
PURLE. n. f. The grounds on the borders of a forest; border; inclosure.
In the purle of this forest stands
A sheepcote, fence'd about with olive trees. Shakefp.
Such civil matters fall within the purle of religion. L'Estr.
To understand all the purle of this place, and to illustrate this subject, I must venture myself into the haunts of beauty and gallantry. Spektator.
He may be left to rot among thieves in some stinking jail, merely for mistaking the purle of the law. Swift.
A party next of glitt'ring dames, Thrown round the purle of St. James,
Came early out. Swift.
PURLE. n. f. In architecture, those pieces of timber that lie across the rafters on the inside, to keep them from sinking in the middle of their length. Bailey.
To PURLOIN. v. a. [this word is of doubtful etymology.
Skinner deduces it from pur and loin, French; Mr. Lye from purlouhnan, Saxon, to lie hid.] To steal; to take by theft.
He, that brave fied there finding ready dight,
*Purle*d both fied and spear, and ran away full light. F. 2.
The Arimaspian by stealth
Had, from his wakeful custody, *purle*d
The guarded gold. Milton.
They not content like felons to purle,
Add treason to it, and debate the coin. Denham.
Some writers make all ladies *purle*d,
And knights purle like a whirlwind. Hudibras.
When did the muse from Fletcher scenes purle,
As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transmute to thine? Dryden.
Your butler purle your liquor, and the brewer tells your hog-wash. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
Prometheus once this chain *purle*d,
Disolv'd, and into money coin'd. Swift.
PURLOINER. n. f. [from purle.] A thief; one that steals clandestinely.
It may seem hard, to see publick *purle*ners sit upon the lives of the little ones, that go to the gallows. L'Estrange.
PURPARTY. n. f. [pur and part, Fr.] Share; part in division.
Each of the coparceners had an entire county allotted for her purparty. Davies on Ireland.
PURPLE. adj. [purpure, Fr. purpureus, Lat.]
1. Red tinged with blue.
The poop was beaten gold,
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd, that
The winds were love-sick with e'm. Shakefp.
You violets, that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known;
What are you when the rose is blown?
A small oval plate, cut off a flinty pebble, and polished, is prettily variegated with a pale grey, blue, yellow, and purple. Woodward on Fossils.
2. In poetry, red.
I view a field of blood,
And Tyber rolling with a purple flood.
Their mingled limbs
Crashing at once, death dyes the purple seas
With gore. Thomson's Summer.
To PURPLE. v. a. [purpure, Lat.] To make red; to colour with purple.
Whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke, Fulfil your pleasure. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Cruel and fuddain, hast thou since Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
Though fall'n on evil days,
In darkness, and with dangers compass'd round,
And solitude! yet, not alone, while thou Vist'it my slumbers nightly; or when morn Purpled the East. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xxx.

PUR

Throw hither all your quaint enamel'd eyes,
That on the green turf flick the honied show'rs,
And purple all the ground with vernal flow'rs. Milton.
Aurora had but newly chas'd the night,
